

Nos. 17-3752, 18-1253, 19-1129, and 19-1189

---

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT

---

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA and STATE OF NEW JERSEY,

Plaintiffs-Appellees,

v.

PRESIDENT, UNITED STATES OF AMERICA et al.,

Defendants-Appellants,

and

LITTLE SISTERS OF THE POOR SAINTS PETER AND PAUL HOME,

Intervenor-Defendant-Appellant.

---

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

---

BRIEF OF AMICUS CURIAE THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION, THE ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE, THE LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE ON CIVIL AND HUMAN RIGHTS, AND THE NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE

---

SARA J. ROSE
ACLU OF PENNSYLVANIA
PO Box 23058
Pittsburgh, PA 15222
Telephone: (412) 681-7864
srose@aclupa.org

BRIGITTE AMIRI
ACLU FOUNDATION
125 Broad Street
New York, NY 10004
Telephone: (212) 549-2500
bamiri@aclu.org

CORPORATE DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

Amici Curiae American Civil Liberties Union, Anti-Defamation League, Leadership Conference on Civil and Human Rights, and National Urban League are non-profit entities that do not have parent corporations. No publicly held corporation owns 10 percent or more of any stake or stock in amici curiae.

/s/ Sara J. Rose

Sara J. Rose

ACLU of Pennsylvania

PO Box 23058

Pittsburgh, PA 15222

Telephone: (412) 681-7864

TABLE OF CONTENTS

STATEMENT OF INTEREST .....	1
STATEMENT PURSUANT TO FRAP 29 .....	1
INTRODUCTION .....	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT .....	2
ARGUMENT .....	5
I.    THE HISTORICAL MOVEMENT TOWARD GREATER EQUALITY FOR WOMEN AND RACIAL MINORITIES HAS BEEN ACCOMPANIED BY A GROWING REJECTION OF RELIGIOUS JUSTIFICATIONS FOR DISCRIMINATION IN THE MARKETPLACE.....	5
A.    Racial Discrimination .....	5
B.    Gender Discrimination.....	11
II.   THIS COURT SHOULD NOT ALLOWAPPELLANTS TO RESURRECT THE DISCREDITED NOTION THAT RELIGIOUS BELIEFS MAY TRUMP A LAW DESIGNED TO ENSURE EQUAL PARTICIPATION IN SOCIETY. ....	17
CONCLUSION .....	21
CERTIFICATES .....	22

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases

Berea College v. Commonwealth , 94 S.W. 623 (Ky. 1906), aff'd , 211 U.S. 45 (1908) .....	7
Bob Jones Univ. v. United States , 461 U.S. 574 (1983).....	9
Bowie v. Birmingham Railway &amp; Electric Co. , 27 So. 1016 (Ala. 1900).....	7
Bradwell v. State , 83 U.S. 130 (1872) (Bradley, J., concurring) .....	12, 13
Brown v. Board of Education , 347 U.S. 483 (1954).....	7, 8
Burwell v. Hobby Lobby Stores, Inc. , 134 S.Ct. 2751 (2014).....	1
Corporation of the Presiding Bishop of the Church of Latter-Day Saints v. Amos , 483 U.S. 327 (1987).....	10
Dole v. Shenandoah Baptist Church , 899 F.2d 1389 (4th Cir. 1990) .....	15
EEOC v. Fremont Christian Schools , 781 F.2d 1362 (9th Cir. 1986) .....	15
EEOC v. Pacific Press Publishing Association , 676 F.2d 1272 (9th Cir. 1982) .....	9, 10
EEOC v. Tree of Life Christian Schools , 751 F. Supp. 700 (S.D. Ohio 1990) .....	15
Forziano v. Indep. Grp. Home Living Program , No. 13-cv-0370, 2014 WL 1277912 (E.D.N.Y. Mar. 26, 2014) .....	16
Frontiero v. Richardson , 411 U.S. 677 (1973).....	11, 13

Ganzy v. Allen Christian Sch. , 995 F. Supp. 340 (E.D.N.Y. 1998) .....	16
Green v. State , 58 Ala. 190 (Ala. 1877) .....	6
Hamilton v. Southland Christian Sch., Inc. , 680 F.3d 1316 (11th Cir. 2012) .....	16
State ex rel. Hawkins v. Bd. of Control , 83 So. 2d 20 (Fla. 1955) .....	8
Hosanna-Tabor Evangelical Lutheran Church &amp; School v. EEOC , 132 S. Ct. 694 (2012).....	10
Hoyt v. Florida , 368 U.S. 57 (1961).....	13
International Union v. Johnson Controls, Inc. , 499 U.S. 187 (1991).....	15
Kinney v. Commonwealth , 71 Va. 858 (Va. 1878) .....	6
Lawrence v. Texas , 539 U.S. 558 (2003).....	21
Loving v. Virginia , 388 U.S. 1 (1967).....	9
Matthews v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. , 417 F. App'x 552 (7th Cir. 2011) .....	16
Muller v. Oregon , 208 U.S. 412 (1908).....	13
Nevada Department of Human Resources v. Hibbs , 538 U.S. 721 (2003).....	13, 15, 18
Newman v. Piggie Park Enterprises., Inc. , 256 F. Supp. 941 (D.S.C. 1966), aff'd in relevant part and rev'd in part on other grounds , 377 F.2d 433 (4th Cir. 1967), aff'd and modified on other grounds , 390 U.S. 400 (1968).....	10

Obergefell v. Hodges , 135 S. Ct. 2594 (2016).....	2, 3
Orr v. Orr , 440 U.S. 268 (1979).....	14
Peterson v. Hewlett-Packard Co. , 358 F.3d 599 (9th Cir. 2004) .....	16
Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania v. Casey , 505 U.S. 833 (1992).....	17, 18, 19
Plessy v. Ferguson , 163 U.S. 537 (1896).....	7
Scott v. Emerson , 15 Mo. 576 (Mo. 1852).....	5
Scott v. State , 39 Ga. 321 (Ga. 1869) .....	6
Stanton v. Stanton , 421 U.S. 7 (1975).....	14
State v. Gibson , 36 Ind. 389 (Ind. 1871) .....	6
Swanner v. Anchorage Equal Rights Commission , 874 P.2d 274 (Alaska 1994) .....	16
The West Chester &amp; Philadelphia R.R. v. Miles , 55 Pa. 209 (Pa. 1867).....	7
United States v. Virginia , 518 U.S. 515 (1996).....	15
Vigars v. Valley Christian Ctr. , 805 F. Supp. 802 (N.D. Cal. 1992).....	16

Statutes

Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, Pub. L. No. 111-148, sec. 1001, § 2713(a)(4), 124 Stat. 119, 131-32 (2010), 42 U.S.C.A. § 300gg-13 .....18
Title IX, Education Amendments of 1972, 20 U.S.C. § 1861(a)(3).....14

Administrative & Legislative Materials

155 Cong. Rec. S11,979 (daily ed. Nov. 30, 2009) .....18
155 Cong. Rec. S12,019 (daily ed. Dec. 1, 2009) .....18
Tax-Exempt Status of Private Schools: Hearing Before the Subcomm. on Taxation & Debt Management Generally of the Committee on Finance, 96th Cong. 18 (1979) (statement by Sen. Laxalt) .....8
U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, Discriminatory Religious Schools and Tax Exempt Status (1982) .....8

Regulations

45 C.F.R. § 147.131(a).....1

Other Authorities

Armantine M. Smith, The History of the Woman’s Suffrage Movement in Louisiana, 62 La. L. Rev. 509 (2002) .....12
Black Mamas Matter Alliance & Ctr. for Reproductive Rights, Black Mamas Matter: Advancing the Human Right to Safe and Respectful Maternal Health Care (May 2018) .....17
Claudia Goldin & Lawrence F. Katz, The Power of the Pill: Oral Contraceptives and Women’s Career and Marriage Decisions, 110 J. of Pol. Econ. 730 (2002) .....19
Colleen McNicholas et al., The Contraceptive CHOICE Project Round Up, 57 Clinical Obstetrics & Gynecology 635 (Dec. 2014) .....20
Convention of Ministers, An Address to Christians Throughout the World (1863).....6

Guttmacher Institute, A Real-Time Look at the Impact of the Recession on Women’s Family Planning and Pregnancy Decisions (Sept. 2009) .....	20
Guttmacher Institute, Fact Sheet: Contraceptive Use in the United States (July 2018).....	20
Guttmacher Institute, Unintended Pregnancy in the United States (Sept. 2016).....	19
Guttmacher Rep. on Pub. Policy 5, 6 (2004) .....	19
Jeffrey Peipert et al., Preventing Unintended Pregnancies by Providing No-Cost Contraception .....	20
John C. Jeffries, Jr. & James E. Ryan, A Political History of the Establishment Clause , 100 Mich. L. Rev. 279 (2001) .....	8
Kevin Outterson, Tragedy and Remedy: Reparations for Disparities in Black Health , 9 DePaul J. Health Care L. 735 (2005).....	7
The Leadership Conference Education Fund, Striking a Balance: Advancing Civil and Human Rights While Preserving Religious Liberty (Jan. 2016).....	16
Martha J. Bailey et al., The Opt-in Revolution? Contraception and the Gender Gap in Wages (Nat’l Bureau of Econ. Research Working Paper o. 17922, 2012).....	19
Note, Segregation Academies and State Action , 82 Yale L.J. 1436 (1973) .....	8
R. Randall Kelso, Modern Moral Reasoning and Emerging Trends in Constitutional and Other Rights Decision-Making Around the World , 29 Quinnipiac L. Rev. 433 (2011) .....	5, 11
Reva B. Siegel, Reasoning from the Body: A Historical Perspective on Abortion Regulation and Questions of Equal Protection , 44 Stan. L. Rev. 261, 292 (1991).....	12, 13
Reva B. Siegel, She the People: The Nineteenth Amendment, Sex Equality, Federalism, and the Family , 115 Harv. L. Rev. 947, 981 n.96 (2002).....	13

Sidney D. Watson, Race, Ethnicity and Quality of Care: Inequalities and Incentives, 27 Am. J.L. & Med. 203 (2001).....7

Statement about Race at BJU, Bob Jones Univ. (2016) .....11

Su-Ying Liang et al., Women’s Out-of-Pocket Expenditures and Dispensing Patterns for Oral Contraceptive Pills Between 1996 and 2006.....20

STATEMENT OF INTEREST

Amici are nonprofit civil rights organizations. A list with descriptions of proposed amici is attached as Appendix A.

STATEMENT PURSUANT TO FRAP 29

Pursuant to Rule 29(a)(2), all parties have consented to the filing of this amicus brief.

Pursuant to Rule 29(a)(4)(E), no counsel for any party has authored this brief in whole or in part; no party or party’s counsel has contributed money that was intended to fund preparing or submitting this brief; no person—other than Amici Curiae, or its members, or its counsel—contributed money that was intended to fund preparing or submitting the brief.

INTRODUCTION

Amici submit this brief to highlight an important lesson of history: As our society has moved toward greater equality for racial minorities and women, it has increasingly and properly rejected the idea that religion can be used as a justification for discrimination in the marketplace.

At stake in this case are two final rules (Final Rules) promulgated by the Trump administration that would broadly allow employers and universities to invoke religion or morality to block their employees’ and students’ access to contraceptive coverage that is otherwise guaranteed by the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (ACA). The ACA already includes an “accommodation” for religiously affiliated nonprofit organizations that have religious objections to covering contraception, which was extended to “closely-held” for-profit companies by the Supreme Court in Burwell v. Hobby Lobby Stores, Inc., 134 S.Ct. 2751 (2014), as well as an exemption for the group health plan of a “religious employer.” 45 C.F.R. § 147.131(a).

Amici agree with Appellee that the District Court properly enjoined the Final Rules. Contrary to Appellants' argument, the public interest strongly lies with Appellee, its residents, and all other people in the nation negatively affected and discriminated against as a result of these rules.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Religion is a powerful force that shapes individual lives and influences community values. Like other belief systems, it has been used at different times and places to support change and to oppose it, to promote equality and to justify inequality. Our constitutional structure recognizes the importance of religion by protecting its free exercise, and a full range of statutes and regulations reinforce our collective commitment to religious acceptance, diversity, and pluralism. The Supreme Court in Hobby Lobby understood the accommodation to the contraceptive coverage requirement of the ACA (the contraceptive rule) as a reflection of that commitment. Critically, however, the accommodation also recognizes that access to contraceptive care is an important means of ending discrimination against women in the workplace, and that the elimination of such discrimination in the marketplace is a compelling state interest.

The struggle to overcome discrimination while respecting religious liberty is a recurring challenge in our nation's history. By recounting that history in this brief, we do not question any individual or entity's religious faith or suggest that the historical invocation of religion to justify the most odious forms of racial discrimination is equivalent to the religious claims that Appellants raise on behalf of employers here. But that is not the test and should not be the legal measuring rod. As recently observed in Obergefell v. Hodges, religious objections to anti-discrimination laws are often "based on decent and honorable religious or philosophical premises, and neither they nor their beliefs are disparaged here. But when that sincere, personal opposition becomes enacted law and public policy, the necessary consequence is to put the imprimatur of the State itself on an exclusion that soon demeans or stigmatizes those whose own liberty is then denied.” 135 S. Ct. 2594, 2602 (2016).

Religious leaders—like Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.—have often led the movement against discrimination. Yet, throughout our history, religion has also been used to defend discriminatory practices, to oppose evolving notions of equality, and to seek broad exemptions to new legal norms. We can and should learn from that experience.<sup>1</sup>

From the early years of the Republic, religious beliefs were used to justify racial subordination, including the forced enslavement of Africans. Far too often, those views found support in judicial decisions upholding racial segregation and anti-miscegenation laws. Even as the nation’s standards evolved to prohibit racial discrimination in employment, education, marriage, and public accommodations, religious arguments continued to be used to fuel resistance to progress. In particular, Congress and the courts faced repeated calls for religious exemptions to non-discrimination standards. But, by the middle of the twentieth century, those calls were rejected by both the courts and Congress. Instead, the country came to recognize the vital state interest in ending racial discrimination in public arenas and in embracing a vision of equality that does not sanction piecemeal application of the law.

The story of women’s emerging equality follows a similar pattern. Religious beliefs were invoked to justify restrictions on women’s roles, including in suffrage, employment, and access to birth control. Later, religion inspired legislation purportedly designed to “protect” women, including their reproductive capacities. As attitudes changed, laws were enacted prohibiting discrimination and protecting women’s ability to control their reproductive capacity. These measures, like those designed to promote racial equality, were met with resistance, including religiously motivated requests to avoid compliance with evolving legal standards. And, as with race, Congress and the courts have held firm to the vision embodied in newly passed anti-discrimination measures.

---

<sup>1</sup> This brief focuses on efforts to justify discrimination against racial minorities and women on religious grounds, but other disadvantaged and marginalized groups have shared similar experiences. See 16 n.8, infra.

The contraception rule addresses a remaining vestige of sex discrimination. As the Supreme Court has recognized, women’s ability to control their reproductive capacities is essential to their participation in society. Contraception is not simply a pill or a device; it is a tool, like education, essential to women’s equality. Without access to contraception, women’s ability to complete an education, to hold a job, to advance in a career, to care for children, or to aspire to a higher place, whatever that may be, may be significantly compromised. By establishing meaningful access to contraception for many women, the contraception rule takes a giant and long overdue step to level the playing field.

If the Final Rules are upheld, employers and universities that object to providing contraceptive care on religious or moral grounds would be wholly exempt from the contraception rule leaving employees and students unable to obtain coverage through the accommodation scheme. As a matter of the public interest, employers and universities need not forfeit their individual right to oppose contraceptives on religious grounds, but a personal religious objection should not be a license to disregard the law and deprive their employees and students of a critical health benefit purposefully designed to further equality.

ARGUMENT

I. THE HISTORICAL MOVEMENT TOWARD GREATER EQUALITY FOR WOMEN AND RACIAL MINORITIES HAS BEEN ACCOMPANIED BY A GROWING REJECTION OF RELIGIOUS JUSTIFICATIONS FOR DISCRIMINATION IN THE MARKETPLACE.

A. Racial Discrimination

There was a time in our nation's history when religion was used to justify slavery, Jim Crow laws, and bans on interracial marriage. God and "Divine Providence" were invoked to validate segregation, and, for decades, these arguments trumped secular and religious calls for equality and humanity. Eventually, due to evolving societal attitudes and the steadfast efforts of civil rights advocates, systems of enslavement and segregation were dismantled, and those who clung to religious justifications for racial discrimination were nonetheless required to obey the nation's anti-discrimination laws. Although the history of religious justification for slavery, racial discrimination, and racial segregation are different in many ways from the instant request for a religious exemption, the lessons derived from that experience are instructive.

Early in our country's history, religious beliefs were invoked to justify the most fundamental of inequalities: slavery. Indeed, courts, politicians, and clergy often invoked faith to defend slavery. The Missouri Supreme Court, in rejecting Dred Scott's claim for freedom, suggested that slavery was "the providence of God" to rescue an "unhappy race" from Africa and place them in "civilized nations." Scott v. Emerson, 15 Mo. 576, 587 (Mo. 1852). Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederate States of America, proclaimed that slavery was sanctioned by "the Bible, in both Testaments, from Genesis to Revelation." R. Randall Kelso, Modern Moral Reasoning and Emerging Trends in Constitutional and Other Rights Decision-Making Around the World, 29 Quinnipiac L. Rev. 433, 437 (2011) (citation and quotations omitted). Christian pastors and leaders declared: “We regard abolitionism as an interference with the plans of Divine Providence.” Convention of Ministers, An Address to Christians Throughout the World 14 (1863), <https://archive.org/details/addresstochristi00phil> (last visited Nov. 12, 2018).

Religion was also invoked, including by the courts, to justify anti-miscegenation laws. For example, in upholding the criminal conviction of an African-American woman for cohabitating with a white man, the Georgia Supreme Court held that no law of the State could attempt to enforce moral or social equality between the different races or citizens of the State. Such equality does not in fact exist, and never can. The God of nature made it otherwise, and no human law can produce it, and no human tribunal can enforce it.

Scott v. State, 39 Ga. 321, 326 (Ga. 1869). In upholding the criminal conviction of an interracial couple for violation of Virginia’s anti-miscegenation law, the Virginia Supreme Court reasoned that, based on “the Almighty,” the two races should be kept “distinct and separate, and that connections and alliances so unnatural that God and nature seem to forbid them, should be prohibited by positive law and be subject to no evasion.” Kinney v. Commonwealth, 71 Va. 858, 869 (Va. 1878); see also Green v. State, 58 Ala. 190, 195 (Ala. 1877) (upholding conviction for interracial marriage, reasoning God “has made the two races distinct”); State v. Gibson, 36 Ind. 389, 405 (Ind. 1871) (declaring right “to follow the law of races established by the Creator himself” to uphold constitutionality of conviction of a black man who married a white woman).

Similar justifications were accepted by courts to sustain segregation. In 1867, Mary E. Miles defied railroad rules by refusing to take a seat in the “colored” section of the train car. She brought suit against the railroad for physically ejecting her from the train. A jury awarded Ms. Miles five dollars. The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania reversed, relying in part on “the order of Divine Providence” that dictates that the races should not mix. The West Chester & Phila. R.R. v. Miles, 55 Pa. 209, 213 (Pa. 1867); see also Bowie v. Birmingham Ry. & Elec. Co., 27 So. 1016, 1018-19 (Ala. 1900) (looking to reasoning from Miles to affirm judgment for railroad that forcibly ejected African-American woman from the “whites only” section of rail car). In 1906, the Kentucky Supreme Court affirmed the enforcement of a law prohibiting whites and blacks from attending the same school, noting that the separation of the races was “divinely ordered.” Berea College v. Commonwealth, 94 S.W. 623, 626 (Ky. 1906), aff’d, 211 U.S. 45 (1908).<sup>2</sup>

These religious arguments in favor of racial segregation slowly lost currency, but not without resistance. The turning point in our country’s history was marked by two events. The first was the Supreme Court’s decision in Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954), which repudiated the “separate but equal” doctrine established in Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896), and declared racial segregation in public schools to be unconstitutional. The second was Congress’s passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which prohibited discrimination in public schools, employment, and public accommodations.

The resistance to the movement for racial equality, both religiously based and otherwise, was particularly intense in the context of education. Members of the Florida Supreme Court invoked religion to justify resistance to integration in the schools, noting that “when God created man, he allotted each race to his own

---

<sup>2</sup> Religious justifications for segregation also had a direct impact on the availability and quality of health care for African Americans. See, e.g., Sidney D. Watson, Race, Ethnicity and Quality of Care: Inequalities and Incentives, 27 Am. J.L. & Med. 203, 211 (2001) (“Historically, most hospitals were ‘white only.’ The few hospitals that admitted Blacks strictly limited their numbers [and] segregated [the facilities and equipment.]”); Kevin Outterson, Tragedy and Remedy: Reparations for Disparities in Black Health, 9 DePaul J. Health Care L. 735, 757 (2005) (“Many hospitals were not available to Blacks in the first half of the twentieth century.”).

continent according to color, Europe to the white man, Asia to the yellow man, Africa to the black man, and America to the red man.” State ex rel. Hawkins v. Bd. of Control, 83 So. 2d 20, 28 (Fla. 1955) (concurring opinion). Indeed, they went so far as to characterize Brown as advising “that God’s plan was in error and must be reversed.” Id.

In the years following the Supreme Court’s enforcement of Brown, the number of private, often Christian, segregated schools expanded exponentially and white students left the public schools in droves. See Note, Segregation Academies and State Action, 82 Yale L.J. 1436, 1437-40 (1973); see also U.S. Comm’n on Civil Rights, Discriminatory Religious Schs. and Tax Exempt Status 1, 4-5 (1982) (recounting the massive withdrawal of white students from public schools after Brown and a proliferation of private schools, many associated with churches). The schools were often open about their motives. For example, Brother Floyd Simmons, who founded the Elliston Baptist Academy in Memphis, said, “I would never have dreamed of starting a school, hadn’t it been for busing.” John C. Jeffries, Jr. & James E. Ryan, A Political History of the Establishment Clause, 100 Mich. L. Rev. 279, 334 (2001).

In response, the Treasury Department issued a ruling declaring that racially segregated schools would not be eligible for tax-exempt status.<sup>3</sup> Attempts by the IRS to enforce the Treasury Department’s rule were challenged in the courts. Most <sup>3</sup> Subsequent efforts by the IRS to adopt guidelines for assessing whether private schools were not discriminatory, and thus eligible for tax exempt status, met with resistance. At a hearing, for example, Senators expressed concern about the impact on religious schools, emphasizing that the issue “involve[d] the rights of two groups of minorities.” See Tax-Exempt Status of Private Schs.: Hearing Before the Subcomm. on Taxation & Debt Mgmt. Generally of the Comm. on Fin., 96th Cong. 18, 21 (1979) (statement by Sen. Laxalt).

---

notably, Bob Jones University brought suit after the IRS revoked the University's tax-exempt status based first on its policy of refusing to admit African-American students, and subsequently on its policy of refusing to admit students engaged in or advocating interracial relationships. Bob Jones Univ. v. United States, 461 U.S. 574 (1983). The sponsors of Bob Jones University "genuinely believe[d] that the Bible forbids interracial dating and marriage." Id. at 580. Bob Jones's lesser-known co-plaintiff, Goldsboro Christian Schools, operated a school from kindergarten through high school, which refused to admit African-American students. According to its interpretation of the Bible, "[c]ultural or biological mixing of the races [was] regarded as a violation of God's command." Id. at 583 n.6. Both schools sued under the Free Exercise Clause, arguing that the rule could not constitutionally apply to schools engaged in racial discrimination based on sincerely held religious beliefs. The Supreme Court rejected the schools' claims, holding that the government's interest in eradicating racial discrimination in education outweighed any burdens on religious beliefs. Id. at 602-04.

Progress toward racial equality was not limited to schools. Although anti-miscegenation laws eventually fell, the path to that rightful conclusion was not a smooth one. The trial court in Loving v. Virginia adhered to the reasoning of earlier decades: "Almighty God created the races white, black, yellow, malay and red, and he placed them on separate continents. And but for the interference with his arrangement there would be no cause for such marriages. The fact that he separated the races shows that he did not intend for the races to mix." 388 U.S. 1, 3 (1967) (quoting trial court). But the Supreme Court expressly rejected the trial court's reasoning and declared Virginia's anti-miscegenation law unconstitutional. Id. at 2.

The Civil Rights Act of 1964 also faced objections based on religion, all of which were ultimately rejected. Most notably, the House exempted religious employers entirely from the proscriptions of the Act. See EEOC v. Pacific Press

Pub. Ass'n, 676 F.2d 1272, 1276 (9th Cir. 1982) (recounting legislative history of Civil Rights Act of 1964). However, the law, as enacted, permitted no employment discrimination based on race; it only authorized religious employers to discriminate on the basis of religion. Id. Later efforts to pass a blanket exemption for religious employers again failed. Id. at 1277.<sup>4</sup>

Religious resistance to the 1964 Civil Rights Act did not stop with its passage. The owner of a barbecue chain who was sued in 1964 for refusing to serve blacks responded by claiming that serving black people violated his religious beliefs. The court rejected the restaurant owner's defense, holding that the owner has a constitutional right to espouse the religious beliefs of his own choosing, however, he does not have the absolute right to exercise and practice such beliefs in utter disregard of the clear constitutional rights of other citizens.

Newman v. Piggie Park Enters., Inc., 256 F. Supp. 941, 945 (D.S.C. 1966), aff'd in relevant part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 377 F.2d 433 (4th Cir. 1967), aff'd and modified on other grounds, 390 U.S. 400 (1968).

Since the middle of the twentieth century, the argument that religious beliefs trump measures designed to eradicate racial discrimination—whether in toto or piecemeal—has slowly lost its force. As courts shifted to a wholesale rejection of religious justifications for racial discrimination and societal attitudes evolved, religious arguments were no longer offered in mainstream society to defend racial segregation and subordination. In fact, “no major religious or secular tradition today attempts to defend the practices of the past supporting slavery, segregation, [or] anti-<sup>4</sup> The Act, while barring race discrimination by religious organizations, respects the workings of houses of worship and also permits discrimination in favor of co-religionists in certain religiously affiliated institutions and positions. See Corp. of the Presiding Bishop of the Church of Latter-Day Saints v. Amos, 483 U.S. 327 (1987); cf. Hosanna-Tabor Evangelical Lutheran Church & Sch. v. EEOC, 132 S. Ct. 694 (2012) (recognizing ministerial exception).

---

miscegenation laws.” R. Randall Kelso, Modern Moral Reasoning, supra, at 439. Reflecting this evolution, Bob Jones University has apologized for its prior discriminatory policies, stating that by previously subscribing to a segregationist ethos . . . we failed to accurately represent the Lord and to fulfill the commandment to love others as ourselves. For these failures we are profoundly sorry. Though no known antagonism toward minorities or expressions of racism on a personal level have ever been tolerated on our campus, we allowed institutional policies to remain in place that were racially hurtful.

See Statement about Race at BJU, Bob Jones Univ., <http://www.bju.edu/about/what-we-believe/race-statement.php> (last visited Nov. 12, 2018). Although there are many differences in the discrimination described above and the contraception rule, this history highlights the hazards of recognizing a religious exemption to a federal anti-discrimination measure that promotes a compelling governmental interest in equality and opportunity.

B. Gender Discrimination

The path to achieving women’s equality has followed a course similar to the struggle for racial equality. See Frontiero v. Richardson, 411 U.S. 677, 684-88 (1973) (chronicling the long history of sex discrimination in the United States).<sup>5</sup> Efforts to advance women’s equality, like those furthering other civil rights, were supported—and thwarted—in the name of religion. Those who invoked God and faith as justification for slavery and segregation also invoked God and faith to limit women’s roles. One champion of slavery in the antebellum South, George Fitzhugh, <sup>5</sup> The Court in Frontiero noted that “throughout much of the 19th century the position of women in our society was, in many respects, comparable to that of blacks under the pre-Civil War slave codes,” emphasizing that women, like slaves, could not “hold office, serve on juries, or bring suit in their own names,” and that married women traditionally could not own property or even be legal guardians of their children. 411 U.S. at 685.

---

plainly stated that God gave white men dominion over “slaves, wives, and children.” Armantine M. Smith, The History of the Woman’s Suffrage Movement in Louisiana, 62 La. L. Rev. 509, 511 (2002).

Religious arguments were invoked to limit women’s roles in society. And in this context, as with race, these arguments were initially embraced by courts. For example, the Supreme Court held that the State of Illinois could prohibit women from practicing law, and in his famous concurrence, Justice Bradley opined that:

The constitution of the family organization, which is founded in the divine ordinance, as well as in the nature of things, indicates the domestic sphere as that which properly belongs to the domain and functions of womanhood . . . .The paramount destiny and mission of woman are to fulfill the noble and benign offices of wife and mother. This is the law of the Creator.

Bradwell v. State, 83 U.S. 130, 141 (1872) (Bradley, J., concurring).

This vision of women—as divinely destined for the role of wife and mother—was a prominent argument against suffrage. A leading antisuffragist, Reverend Justin D. Fulton, proclaimed: “It is patent to every one that this attempt to secure the ballot for woman is a revolt against the position and sphere assigned to woman by God himself.” Reva B. Siegel, She the People: The Nineteenth Amendment, Sex Equality, Federalism, and the Family, 115 Harv. L. Rev. 947, 981 n.96 (2002) (quoting Rev. Justin D. Fulton, Women vs. Ballot, in The True Woman: A Series of Discourses: To Which Is Added Woman vs. Ballot 3, 5 (1869); see also id. at 978 (quoting Rep. Caples at the California Constitutional Convention in 1878-79 as saying of women’s suffrage: “It attacks the integrity of the family; it attacks the eternal degrees [sic] of God Almighty; it denies and repudiates the obligations of motherhood.” (internal citation and quotations omitted)). It was in this same time period that the first laws against contraception were enacted to address what was characterized as “physiological sin.” Reva B. Siegel, Reasoning from the Body: A Historical Perspective on Abortion Regulation and Questions of Equal Protection, 44 Stan. L. Rev. 261, 292 (1991) (quoting H.S. Pomeroy, The Ethics of Marriage 97 (1888)); see also id. at 293 (quoting physician in lecture opposed to interruption of intercourse: “She sins because she shirks those responsibilities for which she was created.”).

Even as times changed, and women began entering the workforce in greater numbers, they were constrained by the longstanding and religiously imbued vision of women as mothers and wives. As the Supreme Court recognized in Frontiero, “[a]s a result of notions such as [those articulated in Justice Bradley’s concurrence in Bradwell], our statute books gradually became laden with gross, stereotyped distinctions between the sexes.” 411 U.S. at 685.<sup>6</sup> Those statutes were often upheld by the Supreme Court. For example, in Muller v. Oregon, the Court upheld workday limitations for women because “healthy mothers are essential to vigorous offspring, [and therefore] the physical well-being of woman becomes an object of public interest and care in order to preserve the strength and vigor of the race.” 208 U.S. 412, 421 (1908); see also Hoyt v. Florida, 368 U.S. 57, 62 (1961) (holding women should be exempt from mandatory jury duty service because they are “still regarded as the center of home and family life”).

But just like society’s views of race evolved, society’s views of women progressed, and gradually women’s ability to pursue goals other than, or in addition <sup>6</sup> Concomitant with a restricted vision of women’s roles were constraints on the roles of men. In the idealized role, men were heads of households, the wage earners, and the actors in the polity. They were not caretakers, for example. See, e.g., Nev. Dep’t of Human Res. v. Hibbs, 538 U.S. 721, 736 (2003) (recognizing that the historic “[s]tereotypes about women’s domestic roles are reinforced by parallel stereotypes presuming a lack of domestic responsibilities for men”). And, for both sexes, these visions were idealized, and unrealistic for many households, particularly those of the working poor, where women as well as men labored outside the home.

---

to, becoming wives and mothers was recognized. Indeed, the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 was a step forward for both race and gender equality because Title VII of the Act barred discrimination based on sex and race in the workplace. The protection against gender discrimination, like that for race, passed in the face of religious objection and without the proposed exemption that sought to permit religious organizations to engage in gender-based employment discrimination.<sup>7</sup>

Slowly the courts, too, began dismantling the notion that divine ordinance and the law of the Creator require women to be confined to roles as wives and mothers. For example, the Supreme Court held a state law that treated girls' and boys' age of majority differently for the purposes of calculating child support unconstitutional, rejecting the state's argument that girls do not need support for as long as boys because they will marry quickly and will not need a secondary education. Stanton v. Stanton, 421 U.S. 7 (1975). The Court reasoned:

No longer is the female destined solely for the home and the rearing of the family, and only the male for the marketplace and the world of ideas. Women's activities and responsibilities are increasing and expanding. Coeducation is a fact, not a rarity. The presence of women in business, in the professions, in government and, indeed, in all walks of life where education is a desirable, if not always a necessary, antecedent is apparent and a proper subject of judicial notice.

Id. at 14-15 (internal citation omitted); see also Orr v. Orr, 440 U.S. 268, 279 n.9 (1979) (holding unconstitutional a law that allowed alimony from husbands but not wives, as "part and parcel of a larger statutory scheme which invidiously discriminated against women, removing them from the world of work and property and 'compensating' them by making their designated place 'secure'"). Additionally, <sup>7</sup> But see Title IX, Education Amendments of 1972, 20 U.S.C. § 1681(a)(3) (providing an exemption for "an educational institution which is controlled by a religious organization if the application of [Title IX] would not be consistent with the religious tenets of such organization").

---

when striking a ban on the admission of women to the Virginia Military Institute, the Court noted:

“Inherent differences” between men and women . . . remain cause for celebration, but not for denigration of the members of either sex or for artificial constraints on an individual’s opportunity. Sex classifications . . . may not be used, as they once were . . . to create or perpetuate the legal, social, and economic inferiority of women.

United States v. Virginia, 518 U.S. 515, 533-34 (1996) (internal citations omitted).

The Supreme Court has also dismantled notions that women could be barred from certain jobs because of their reproductive capacity, International Union v. Johnson Controls, Inc., 499 U.S. 187 (1991), and has affirmed legislation that addresses “the fault-line between work and family—precisely where sex-based overgeneralization has been and remains strongest,” Nev. Dep’t of Human Res. v. Hibbs, 538 U.S. 721, 738 (2003). The courts and Congress have thus recognized that “denial or curtailment of women’s employment opportunities has been traceable directly to the pervasive presumption that women are mothers first, and workers second.” Id. at 736 (internal citations and quotations omitted).

As with race, this progress has been tested by religious liberty defenses to the enforcement of anti-discrimination measures. Religious schools resisted the notion that male and female employees must receive equal compensation by invoking the belief that the “Bible clearly teaches that the husband is the head of the house, head of the wife, head of the family.” Dole v. Shenandoah Baptist Church, 899 F.2d 1389, 1392 (4th Cir. 1990). The courts rejected this claim, emphasizing a state interest of the “highest order” in remedying the outmoded belief that men should be paid more than women because of their role in society. Id. at 1398 (citations and quotations omitted); see also EEOC v. Fremont Christian Sch., 781 F.2d 1362 (9th Cir. 1986) (same); EEOC v. Tree of Life Christian Schs., 751 F. Supp. 700 (S.D. Ohio 1990) (same).

Even today, laws and policies designed to protect against gender discrimination continue to face challenges in the name of religious belief, but courts have limited such arguments. See, e.g., Hamilton v. Southland Christian Sch., Inc., 680 F.3d 1316, 1320 (11th Cir. 2012) (reversing summary judgment for religious school that claimed a religious right, based on its opposition to premarital sex, to fire teacher for becoming pregnant outside of marriage, holding that the school seemed “more concerned about her pregnancy and her request to take maternity leave than about her admission that she had premarital sex”); Ganzy v. Allen Christian Sch., 995 F. Supp. 340, 350 (E.D.N.Y. 1998) (holding that a religious school could not rely on its religious opposition to premarital sex as a pretext for pregnancy discrimination, noting that “it remains fundamental that religious motives may not be a mask for sex discrimination in the workplace”); Vigars v. Valley Christian Ctr., 805 F. Supp. 802, 808-10 (N.D. Cal. 1992) (same).<sup>8</sup>

---

<sup>8</sup> Attempts to use religion to discriminate are not limited to race and sex. See, e.g., The Leadership Conference Education Fund, Striking a Balance: Advancing Civil and Human Rights While Preserving Religious Liberty (Jan. 2016), <http://civilrightsdocs.info/pdf/reports/2016/religious-liberty-report-WEB.pdf>. For example, religion has been invoked in an attempt to justify discrimination based on marital status, see Swanner v. Anchorage Equal Rights Comm’n, 874 P.2d 274 (Alaska 1994), and discrimination based on sexual orientation, see, e.g., Peterson v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 358 F.3d 599 (9th Cir. 2004); Matthews v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 417 F. App’x 552 (7th Cir. 2011). Such attempts are also a concern for people with disabilities, who have historically faced limitations from religiously affiliated group homes, including the refusal to allow them to live with romantic partners, even if married. See Forziano v. Indep. Grp. Home Living Program, No. 13-cv-0370, 2014 WL 1277912 (E.D.N.Y. Mar. 26, 2014).

II. THIS COURT SHOULD NOT ALLOW APPELLANTS TO RESURRECT THE DISCREDITED NOTION THAT RELIGIOUS BELIEFS MAY TRUMP A LAW DESIGNED TO ENSURE EQUAL PARTICIPATION IN SOCIETY.

The contraception rule, like Title VII and other anti-discrimination measures, is a purposeful effort to address the vestiges of gender discrimination. And like those other anti-discrimination laws, this rule is being resisted in the name of religion. Appellants defend the Final Rules—both in the way they were issued and their substance—on the ground that employers and universities should be entitled to evade the mandates of the law based on their religious beliefs. As discussed supra, the argument that religious belief justifies discrimination, the denial of rights, or the relinquishment of benefits is an old, discredited theory that should, once again, be rejected.

The contraception rule has, and will continue to, transform women’s lives, by enabling women to decide if and when to become a parent and allowing women to make educational and employment choices that benefit themselves and their families.<sup>9</sup> As attested by Appellee’s expert, by permitting women to time and space out their pregnancies, contraception “empower[s them] to complete their goals in life,” including finishing their education, achieving their career and financial goals, and having “their children when they feel financially stable.” JA 567. As the Supreme Court has recognized, “[t]he ability of women to participate equally in the economic and social life of the Nation has been facilitated by their ability to control their reproductive lives.” Planned Parenthood of Se. Pa. v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 856 (1992).

---

<sup>9</sup> Moreover, the rule is also important to protect women’s health. This is particularly true for women of color who disproportionately suffer from health conditions that can be aggravated by pregnancy. See, e.g., Black Mamas Matter Alliance & Ctr. for Reproductive Rights, Black Mamas Matter: Advancing the Human Right to Safe and Respectful Maternal Health Care 24 (May 2018).

If implemented, the Final Rules would undermine the equalizing impact of the contraceptive rule and discriminate against women in at least three ways.

First, the Final Rules target and single out care that women need for unique and discriminatory treatment, authorizing employers and universities to reinstate the very discrimination that Congress intended the contraception rule to address. As Senator Kirsten Gillibrand emphasized in her support of the Women’s Health Amendment (WHA),<sup>10</sup> which authorized the contraceptive rule, “in general women of childbearing age spend 68 percent more in out-of-pocket health care costs than men . . . . This fundamental inequity in the current system is dangerous and discriminatory and we must act . . .” 155 Cong. Rec. S12,019, S12,027 (daily ed. Dec. 1, 2009); see also 155 Cong. Rec. S11,979, S11,988 (daily ed. Nov. 30, 2009) (statement of Sen. Mikulski) (“[O]ften those things unique to women have not been included in health care reform. Today we guarantee it and we assure it and we make it affordable by dealing with copayments and deductibles.”). The Final Rules sanction employers and universities to harm women by cutting their benefit packages, and convey the distinct message that women are second class citizens, who can have inferior benefit packages to their male peers.

Second, the Final Rules put a government stamp of approval on gender stereotypes that have been used to hold women in a place of inequality, particularly the notion, long endorsed by society, that “a woman is, and should remain the ‘center of home and family life.’” Hibbs, 538 U.S. at 729 (quoting Hoyt, 368 U.S. at 62). The rules attack a fundamental premise underlying access to contraception, namely that society no longer demands that women either accept pregnancy or refrain from nonprocreative sex. As so eloquently stated in Casey, “these sacrifices [to become a mother] have from the beginning of the human race been endured by woman with a pride that ennobles her in the eyes of others . . . [but they] cannot alone be grounds for the State to insist she make the sacrifice.” Casey, 505 U.S. at 852.

---

<sup>10</sup> Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, Pub. L. No. 111-148, sec. 1001, § 2713(a)(4), 124 Stat. 119, 131-32 (2010) (codified at 42 U.S.C.A. § 300gg-13).

Finally, the Final Rules are designed to burden women in a way that frustrates their ability to participate equally in the workforce, education, and civic life. When adopting the contraceptive rule, the government emphasized that the discrimination addressed by the rule was not limited to financial disparities:

Researchers have shown that access to contraception improves the social and economic status of women. Contraceptive coverage, by reducing the number of unintended and potentially unhealthy pregnancies, furthers the goal of eliminating this disparity by allowing women to achieve equal status as healthy and productive members of the job force . . . . The [federal government] aim[s] to reduce these disparities by providing women broad access to preventive services, including contraceptive services.

Fed. Reg. 8725, 8728 (Feb. 15, 2012) (footnote omitted); see also supra note 9. The Final Rules will make it harder for women to access and consistently use the most effective methods of contraception. JA 271-73, 285. Greater access to contraceptives means fewer unintended pregnancies. JA 282, 312. With greater control over their fertility, women have greater and more equal access to education, careers, career advancement, and higher wages. Susan A. Cohen, The Broad Benefits of Investing in Sexual and Reproductive Health, 7 Guttmacher Rep. on Pub. Policy 5, 6 (2004); Martha J. Bailey et al., The Opt-in Revolution? Contraception and the Gender Gap in Wages, 19, 26 (Nat’l Bureau of Econ. Research Working Paper o. 17922, 2012), <http://www.nber.org/papers/w17922>; Claudia Goldin & Lawrence F. Katz, The Power of the Pill: Oral Contraceptives and Women’s Career and Marriage Decisions, 110 J. of Pol. Econ. 730, 749 (2002), <https://dash.harvard.edu/handle/1/2624453>.

Indeed, approximately half of pregnancies are unintended. Guttmacher Institute, Unintended Pregnancy in the United States (Sept. 2016), available at <https://www.guttmacher.org/fact-sheet/unintended-pregnancy-united-states> (last visited Nov. 12, 2018). Several facts underlie this statistic: Many women are unable to afford contraception—even with insurance—because of high co-pays or deductibles, see generally Su-Ying Liang et al., Women’s Out-of-Pocket Expenditures and Dispensing Patterns for Oral Contraceptive Pills Between 1996 and 2006, 83 Contraception 528, 531 (2011); others cannot afford to use contraception consistently, see Guttmacher Institute, A Real-Time Look at the Impact of the Recession on Women’s Family Planning and Pregnancy Decisions 5 (Sept. 2009), <http://www.guttmacher.org/pubs/RecessionFP.pdf> (last visited Nov. 12, 2018); and costs drive women to less expensive and less effective methods, see JA 271-72 (reporting that prior to the ACA’s passage women sometimes did not choose the most effective contraceptive methods, such as intrauterine devices (“IUDs”), because of the high upfront cost).

The contraception rule lifted these barriers, with the promise of increased opportunity for women. A study in St. Louis, which essentially simulated the conditions of the rule, illustrates its impact: Physicians provided counseling and offered nearly 10,000 women contraception, of their choosing, free of cost. Jeffrey Peipert et al., Preventing Unintended Pregnancies by Providing No-Cost Contraception, 120 Obstetrics & Gynecology 1291 (2012). In this setting, 75% of the participants opted for a long-acting reversible contraceptive method, with 58% choosing an IUD. Compare id. at 1293, with Guttmacher Institute, Fact Sheet: Contraceptive Use in the United States (July 2018), <https://www.guttmacher.org/fact-sheet/contraceptive-use-united-states> (last visited Nov. 12, 2018) (showing approximately 12% of all contraceptive users have IUDs as their method). As a result, among women in the study, the unintended pregnancy rate plummeted, and the abortion rate was less than half the regional and national rates. Colleen McNicholas et al., The Contraceptive CHOICE Project Round Up, 57 Clinical Obstetrics & Gynecology 635 (Dec. 2014).

For these reasons, contraception is more than a service, device, or type of healthcare. Meaningful access to birth control is an essential element of women’s constitutionally protected liberty. See Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 567 (2003) (recognizing that sodomy laws do not simply regulate sex but infringe on the liberty rights of gays and lesbians). An exemption countenancing a religious objection to contraception suggests that religious objections are more important than women’s equality in our society. Although our country has made great progress toward achieving women’s equality, more work is needed, and the contraception rule is a crucial step forward.

CONCLUSION

The Court should affirm the judgment below.

Respectfully Submitted,

Dated: March 25, 2019

/s/ Sara J. Rose
SARA J. ROSE
PA ID No. 204936
ACLU of Pennsylvania
PO Box 23058
Pittsburgh, PA 15222
Telephone: (412) 681-7864

BRIGITTE AMIRI
ACLU FOUNDATION
125 Broad Street
New York, NY 10004
Telephone (212) 549-2500

Counsel for Amici

CERTIFICATES

Sara J. Rose, one of the attorneys for Amici, hereby certifies that:

1. Pursuant to L.A.R. 28.3(d), I hereby certify that I am a member in good standing of the Bar of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.
2. This Brief complies with the type/volume limitation in Rules 29(a)(5) and 32(a)(7)(B) of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure because, excluding the parts of the document exempted by Rule 32(f), this document contains 6308 words, excluding caption, tables, signature block and certifications.
3. This Brief complies with the typeface requirements of Rule 32(a)(5) and the type-style requirements of Rule 32(a)(6) of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure because this document has been prepared in a proportionally spaced typeface using Microsoft Word in 14-point Times New Roman.
4. On this date, the foregoing Brief for Amici was filed electronically and served on the other parties via the Court's CM/ECF system. Participants in the case are registered as CM/ECF users and service will be accomplished by the appellate CM/ECF system.
5. Pursuant to L.A.R. 31.1(c), I hereby certify that the text of the electronic Brief for Amici has been filed with the Court in electronic form and will be delivered in paper form within five days, and that the text of the electronic brief is identical to the text in the paper copies.
6. The electronic version of this Brief filed with the Court was virus checked and was found to have no viruses.

Dated: March 25, 2019

s/ Sara J. Rose
_____
Sara J. Rose

APPENDIX A

The American Civil Liberties Union (“ACLU”) is a nationwide, nonprofit, nonpartisan organization with more than 2 million members dedicated to defending the principles of liberty and equality embodied in the Constitution and the nation’s civil rights laws. The American Civil Liberties Unions of Northern California, Southern California, and San Diego and Imperial Counties are the ACLU’s California affiliates. The ACLU has a long history of furthering racial justice and women’s rights, and an equally long history of defending religious liberty. The ACLU also vigorously protects reproductive freedom, and has participated in almost every critical case concerning reproductive rights to reach the Supreme Court.

The Anti-Defamation League (“ADL”) was organized in 1913 with a mission to stop the defamation of the Jewish people and to secure justice and fair treatment to all. Today, it is one of the world’s leading organizations fighting hatred, bigotry, discrimination, and anti-Semitism. To this end, ADL is a staunch supporter of the religious liberties guaranteed by both the Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses. ADL vigorously supported the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA) as a means to protect individual religious exercise, but not as a vehicle to discriminate by enabling some Americans to impose their religious beliefs on others. ADL views reproductive choice as an issue of personal and religious freedom. Accordingly, it has opposed efforts to curtail access to abortion and contraception by participating as amicus curiae in every major reproductive rights case before the U.S. Supreme Court since Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973).

The Leadership Conference on Civil and Human Rights (“The Leadership Conference”) is the nation’s oldest, largest, and most diverse coalition of more than 200 national organizations committed to the protection of civil and human rights in the United States. The Leadership Conference was founded in 1950 by leaders of the civil rights and labor rights movements, grounded in the belief that civil rights would be won not by one group alone but through coalition. The Leadership Conference works to build an America that is inclusive and as good as its ideals by promoting laws and policies that promote the civil and human rights for all individuals in the United States.

The National Urban League is a historic civil rights organization dedicated to economic empowerment in historically underserved urban communities. Founded in 1910 and headquartered in New York City, the National Urban League improves the lives of more than two million people annually through direct service programs, including education, employment training and placement, housing, and health, which are implemented locally by more than 90 National Urban League affiliates in 300 communities across 36 states and the District of Columbia. The National Urban League works to provide the guarantee of civil rights for the underserved in America. Recognizing that economic empowerment in underserved communities is inextricably linked to the reduction of racial health disparities in America, the organization has established the goal that by 2025 every American has access to quality and affordable health care solutions.