INTRODUCTION	1
BACKGROUND	3
A. The federal mandate and its exceptions	3
B. The challenges to the Mandate and the resulting injunctions	6
C. Challenges to the IFRs	10
D. The Final Rule and ongoing proceedings	11
ARGUMENT	12
I. The States lack Article III standing.	12
A. The States lack standing to bring Establishment Clause or Equal Protection claims.	12
B. The States lack injury in fact.	13
C. The States’ claimed injury would not be redressable.	13
II. The Plaintiffs cannot prevail on their claims that the Final Rule is substantively invalid.	15
A. The Final Rule does not violate the ACA.	15
1. The agencies may make exemptions from a contraceptive mandate that they were never obligated to create.	15
2. The States’ reasoning, if accepted, would also invalidate the preexisting religious employer exemption and “accommodation.”	20
3. The agencies are permitted to issue the Final Rule to comply with RFRA.	23
a. RFRA applies broadly to federal laws and federal agencies.	24
b. The mandate as it existed before the Fourth IFR violates RFRA and the Constitution.	24

1	c. After Zubik , courts have unanimously found the mandate as applied to religious employers violated RFRA.....	32
2	d. Where courts are divided, government has discretion to err on the side of not violating civil rights.	32
4	4. Section 1554 of the ACA does not prohibit the Final Rule.	33
5	5. Section 1557 of the ACA does not prohibit the Final Rule.	34
6	B. The Final Rule is not arbitrary and capricious.....	34
7	C. The Final Rule does not violate the Establishment Clause.....	36
8	D. The Final Rule does not violate the Equal Protection Clause.....	40
9	III. The States cannot prevail on their claims that the Final Rule is procedurally invalid.....	41
10	A. Any procedural deficiency was cured by notice and comment before the Final Rule was issued.....	41
11	B. In any event, any procedural error was harmless.....	44
12	CONCLUSION.....	45

INTRODUCTION

The States can't escape RFRA. If the prior version of the contraceptive mandate violates RFRA, then the agencies of course had authority to comply with federal law and issue the Final Rule to eliminate that illegal burden. And if the prior version of the mandate violates RFRA, then of course this Court cannot lawfully impose the remedy the States openly seek, a reimposition of the prior illegal system.

The States' problem—made unavoidably clear by their summary judgment motion—is that they simply have no plausible RFRA argument. Indeed, after over 18 months of litigation, two preliminary injunctions, and four rounds of briefing in this Court and on appeal, the States can still only muster discredited and abandoned arguments from 2015 and hope that the Court won't look at them all that closely.

Unable to mount a substantive RFRA defense of the prior version of the mandate, the States instead argue against various straw-men versions of the statute. But neither the agencies nor the Little Sisters contend that the mere say-so of a religious objector makes a burden substantial under RFRA, Mot. 22, or that “a substantial burden is present anytime a litigant sincerely believes it,” Mot. 23. Rather, we contend that—as the Supreme Court already found in Hobby Lobby—courts should determine the substantiality of a burden by looking at the punishment the government threatens for failure to cease a religious exercise. The States invoke their caricature of Defendants' RFRA argument to obscure a serious point: they ultimately disagree with the Little Sisters not over whether the threatened fines are substantial, but over whether the Sisters should feel religiously obligated not to use the regulatory mechanism for compliance with the Mandate (what the States call the “accommodation”).

Indeed, the States' entire substantial burden analysis is that the so-called accommodation is an “opt-out” from the Mandate that creates a “separate” plan that does not involve the Little Sisters, and

1 to which they should not object. This argument is based on vacated decisions from the courts of appeals
2 and fails to grapple with what the Supreme Court called “substantial clarification and refinement” of 3 the government’s position over the course of the Zubik litigation. Zubik v. Burwell, 136 S. Ct. 1557,
4 1560 (2016). The government’s concessions that the contraceptive coverage is not actually separate at 5 all, and that it “could be modified” so it did not use religious objectors’ plans, id., was an admission
6 that what it was offering religious objectors in the regulatory mechanism was in no way an “opt out.”
7 More importantly, it was a concession that the regulatory mechanism the States seek to reimpose was 8 never the least restrictive means—and therefore necessarily fails RFRA.

9 The States know that they need to use religious objectors’ plans for their system to work—that is,
10 the only way they think they can get coverage to be “seamless” with those plans. Most tellingly, the 11 States now openly insist that coverage be provided inside the religious employer’s plan and not even 12 one “additional step[] outside of their normal coverage.” Mot. 31. The States even admitted on appeal
13 that for self-insured plans, the coverage under the accommodation has been part of the “same ERISA 14 plan” all along.

15 The States’ concessions foreclose any serious argument that contraceptive coverage is “separate”
16 or “independent” in some way that saves the prior version of the mandate from RFRA. Indeed, now
17 that it is agreed the coverage is part of the same plan, the substantial burden issue is not even an open
18 question—rather, it is fully resolved by Hobby Lobby’s holding that it is a substantial burden to force
19 religious employers to provide coverage for religiously-proscribed services. The States’ RFRA
20 defense of the old rules thus melts away, and with it goes any plausible argument that this Court could 21 re-impose that illegal system.

22 The States’ other arguments fare no better. They offer no theory under which the agencies lack 23 authority to issue the Final Rule under the Affordable Care Act or RFRA, but had authority to issue

1 the prior Mandate regulations. The States’ argument that the Final Rule is arbitrary and capricious also 2 ignores the agencies’ Zubik concessions—the agencies recognized that they could no longer defend
3 the prior regulations after Zubik and explained as much in the Final Rule. The States’ Establishment
4 Clause and Equal Protection arguments fail because, among other reasons, they do not take into
5 account the government’s legitimate interest in protecting the free exercise of religion, and its authority
6 to do so. Finally, the States’ procedural arguments fail because the Final Rule has undergone full notice
7 and comment.

8 BACKGROUND

9 A. The federal mandate and its exceptions

10 Federal law requires some employers (namely, those with over 50 employees) to offer group
11 benefits with “minimum essential coverage.” 26 U.S.C. § 5000A(f), 26 U.S.C. § 4980H(a), (c)(2).
12 That “minimum essential coverage” must include, among other things, coverage for “preventive care
13 and screenings” for women. 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a)(4); 29 U.S.C. § 1185d. Congress did not require 14 that “preventive care” include contraceptive coverage. Instead, Congress delegated to HHS the 15 authority to determine what should be included as preventive care “for purposes of this paragraph.”
16 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a)(4).

17 The preventive services mandate was first implemented in an interim final rule on July 19, 2010,
18 published by the Departments of Health and Human Services, Labor, and Treasury (the agencies). 75
19 Fed. Reg. 41,726, 41,728 (July 19, 2010) (First IFR). The First IFR stated that the Health Resources
20 and Services Administration (HRSA), a division of HHS, would produce comprehensive guidelines
21 for women’s preventive services. Id. HHS asked for recommendations from the Institute of Medicine
22 (IOM), 77 Fed. Reg. 8725, 8726 (Feb. 15, 2012), which proposed including, inter alia, all FDA-
23

1 approved contraceptives and sterilization methods.¹ This IFR was enacted without prior notice of 2 rulemaking or opportunity for prior comment, as it came into effect on the day that comments were 3 due.

4 Following the comment period on the First IFR, and thirteen days after IOM issued its 5 recommendations, the agencies promulgated the second IFR. 76 Fed. Reg. 46,621 (Aug. 3, 2011)
 6 (Second IFR). That same day, HRSA issued guidelines on its website adopting the IOM
 7 recommendations in full, mandating all female contraceptive methods. States' Ex. 8 (D4 000284)
 8 HRSA, Women's Preventive Services Guidelines, U.S. Dep't of Health & Human Servs. (Aug. 2011)
 9 (2011 Preventive Services Guidelines).

10 The Second IFR stated that it "contain[ed] amendments" to the First IFR. 76 Fed. Reg. at 46,621.
 11 It implemented HRSA's guidelines without notice and comment. See id. at 46,623. Not all private 12 employers are subject to this Mandate. First, the vast majority of employers—namely, those with fewer 13 than 50 employees—are not required to provide any insurance coverage at all.² Second, approximately 14 a fifth of large employers are exempt through the ACA's exception for "grandfathered health plans."
 15 See 26 U.S.C. § 4980H(c)(2); 42 U.S.C. § 18011; 75 Fed. Reg. 34,538, 34,542 (June 17, 2010); Kaiser
 16 Family Found., Employer Health Benefits 2018 Annual Survey 209 (2018), <https://bit.ly/2T4qwbQ>.
 17 For non-exempt employers, the penalty for offering a plan that excludes coverage for even one of the 18 FDA-approved contraceptive methods is $100 per day for each affected individual. 26 U.S.C.

19 _____
 20 ¹ States' Ex. 18 (D4 000303), Dkt. 313-2 (Institute of Medicine, Clinical Preventive Services for Women: Closing the Gaps, The National Academies Press 10 (2011)).

21 ² According to some estimates, more than 97% of employers have fewer than 50 employees, and 22 therefore face no federal obligation to provide coverage at all. See, e.g., DMDatabases, USA Business List,
 23 <http://bit.ly/10yw56o>. The Hobby Lobby Court estimated that "34 million workers" are employed
 24 by firms with fewer than 50 employees. Burwell v. Hobby Lobby Stores, Inc., 573 U.S. 682, 700 (2014)
 (citing The White House, Health Reform for Small Businesses: The Affordable Care Act Increases Choice and Saving Money for Small Businesses 1).

1 § 4980D(a)-(b). If an employer with more than 50 employees fails to offer a plan at all, the employer
2 owes $2,000 per year for each of its full-time employees. 26 U.S.C. § 4980H(a), (c)(1).

3 The Second IFR also granted HRSA “discretion to exempt certain religious employers from the 4 Guidelines where contraceptive services are concerned.” 76 Fed. Reg. at 46,623. It defined the term
5 “religious employer” narrowly. Id. at 46,626. The Second IFR was effective immediately without prior 6 notice or opportunity for public comment. The agencies received “over 200,000” comments on the 7 Second IFR. 77 Fed. Reg. at 8726. Many of the comments explained the need for a broader religious 8 exemption than that implemented by the Second IFR. However, on February 15, 2012, HHS adopted
9 a final rule that “finaliz[ed], without change,” the Second IFR. Id. at 8725.

10 The agencies then published an Advance Notice of Proposed Rulemaking (ANPRM), 77 Fed. Reg.
11 16,501 (Mar. 21, 2012), and a Notice of Proposed Rulemaking (NPRM), 78 Fed. Reg. 8456 (Feb. 6, 12 2013), which were later adopted in a final rule making further changes to the Mandate, 78 Fed. Reg.
13 39,870 (July 2, 2013). The agencies eventually amended the definition of a religious employer by 14 eliminating some of the criteria from the Second IFR, limiting the definition to organizations “referred 15 to in section 6033(a)(3)(A)(i) or (iii) of the [Internal Revenue] Code,” thus exempting “churches, their 16 integrated auxiliaries, and conventions or associations of churches,” as well as “the exclusively 17 religious activities of any religious order,” from the Mandate. 78 Fed. Reg. at 39,874; see 26 U.S.C.
18 § 6033(a)(3)(A)(i), (iii). The agencies also adopted a regulatory mechanism for compliance with the 19 Mandate—termed an “accommodation”—by which religious employers not covered by the exemption 20 could offer the objected-to contraceptives on their health plans by executing a self-certification and 21 delivering it to the organization’s insurer or the plan’s third-party administrator (TPA).

22 The system initiated by the first two IFRs did not address the concerns of many religious 23 organizations, and many filed lawsuits seeking relief. In July 2013, one of those organizations,
24

Wheaton College, received an emergency injunction from the Supreme Court that protected it from the penalties in the Mandate. Wheaton Coll. v. Burwell, 134 S. Ct. 2806 (2014). Following that injunction, in August 2014, the agencies published a third IFR “in light of the Supreme Court’s interim order” in Wheaton, again without notice and comment. 79 Fed. Reg. 51,092 (Aug. 27, 2014) (Third IFR). This Third IFR amended the Mandate to allow a religious objector to “notify HHS in writing of its religious objection” instead of notifying its insurer or third-party administrator. Id. at 51,094. The Third IFR received over 13,000 publicly posted comments. See EBSA, Coverage of Certain Services Under the Affordable Care Act (Aug. 27, 2014), <https://www.regulations.gov/document?D=EBSA-2014-0013-0002>. The Third IFR was ultimately finalized on July 14, 2015. 80 Fed. Reg. 41,318 (July 14, 2015). The Third IFR did not accommodate the religious beliefs of the Little Sisters and other religious objectors, and the Supreme Court revisited the issue in Zubik v. Burwell, 136 S. Ct. 1557 (2016) (discussed below).

The federal government is also bound—in all of its actions, by any of its parts, under any statute—to obey federal religious freedom laws. See, e.g., 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb et seq. The Religious Freedom Restoration Act prohibits federal agencies from imposing substantial burdens on religion—they “shall not” do it—unless the agency demonstrates that the burden is required by a compelling government interest and there is no “less restrictive” means of achieving that interest. 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-1; Hobby Lobby, 573 U.S. at 728.

B. The challenges to the Mandate and the resulting injunctions

Because the Mandate required that many employers choose between violating their sincere religious beliefs and paying debilitating fines, dozens of cases were filed against it. Those lawsuits resulted in dozens of injunctions from federal courts across the country, and multiple such cases were consolidated at the Supreme Court. See Zubik v. Burwell, 136 S. Ct. 1557 (2016) (consolidating cases

1 from the Third, Fifth, Tenth, and D.C. Circuits).³ Once the cases reached the Supreme Court, the 2 agencies made new concessions that changed the facts and arguments they had previously relied on to 3 defend the Mandate.

4 First, the government admitted for the first time that contraceptive coverage, rather than being
 5 provided as a “separate” plan under the accommodation, must be “part of the same plan as the coverage
 6 provided by the employer,” Br. for the Resp’ts at 38, Zubik, 136 S. Ct. 1557 (quotations omitted),
 7 <https://bit.ly/2DiCj32>; Tr. of Oral Arg. at 60-61, Zubik, 136 S. Ct. 1557, <https://bit.ly/2VklhFx> (Chief
 8 Justice Roberts: “You want the coverage for contraceptive services to be provided, I think as you . . .
 9 said, seamlessly. You want it to be in one insurance package. . . . Is that a fair understanding of the 10 case?”; Solicitor General Verrilli: “I think it is one fair understanding of the case.”). The government
 11 thus removed any basis for lower courts’ prior holdings that the Mandate did not impose a substantial 12 burden on the religious exercise of objecting employers because the provision of contraceptives was 13 separate from their plans. Cf. Tr. of Oral Arg. at 61, Zubik, 136 S. Ct. 1557, <https://bit.ly/2VklhFx>
 14 (Solicitor General Verrilli “would be content” if Court would “assume a substantial burden” and rule 15 only on the government’s strict scrutiny defense).

16 Next, the agencies admitted to the Supreme Court that women who do not receive contraceptive 17 coverage from their employer can “ordinarily” get it from “a family member’s employer,” “an 18 Exchange,” or “another government program.” Br. for the Resp’ts at 65, Zubik, 136 S. Ct. 1557, 19 <https://bit.ly/2DiCj32>. The government also acknowledged that the Mandate “could be modified” to 20 be more protective of religious liberty, Suppl. Br. for the Resp’ts at 14-15, Zubik, 136 S. Ct. 1557, 21

23 ³ The various cases challenging the Mandate are collected at Becket, HHS Mandate Information
 24 Central, <http://www.becketlaw.org/research-central/hhs-info-central/> (last visited May 31, 2019).

<https://bit.ly/2VjFsVb>, thus admitting the Mandate was not the least restrictive means of achieving the government's interests.

The Supreme Court unanimously vacated the decisions of the Courts of Appeals of the Third, Fifth, Tenth, and D.C. Circuits, which had ruled in favor of the agencies. Zubik, 136 S. Ct. at 1561. It noted the “substantial” change in the government’s position and ordered that the parties should be “afforded an opportunity to arrive at an approach going forward” that would resolve the dispute. Id. at 1560. The Court thus ordered the government not to impose taxes or penalties on petitioners for failure to comply with the Mandate and remanded the cases.

Other injunctions forbid the federal government from enforcing the Mandate against all known religious objectors. Some of these were issued prior to the rules at issue in this case.⁴ Some, however, were issued after the IFRs were enjoined.⁵ Indeed, several injunctions have been entered in open-ended class or associational standing cases that allow new members to join.⁶ These injunctions continue to bind the agency defendants to this day.

C. Challenges to the IFRs

After years of unsuccessful attempts to justify the Mandate in court, in compliance with Congress's mandate that government "shall not" impose a substantial burden on religion, and in compliance with injunctions forbidding enforcement against religious and moral objectors, see, e.g., Zubik, 136 S. Ct. at 1561, the federal defendants issued two interim final rules providing that the Mandate will not be enforced against employers with religious or moral objections. 82 Fed. Reg. 47,792 (Oct. 13, 2017) (Fourth IFR); 82 Fed. Reg. 47,838 (Oct. 13, 2017) (Fifth IFR).⁷ The IFRs otherwise left the Mandate in place as to all employers previously covered. The IFRs also left in place the accommodation. 45 C.F.R § 147.131. The IFRs were immediately challenged in this lawsuit and in others around the country.⁸ This Court entered a nationwide injunction preventing the implementation of the Fourth and Fifth IFRs on December 21, 2017 due to a lack of prior notice and comment. Order, Dkt. 105. That injunction was appealed to the Ninth Circuit, which held that the plaintiff States California, Delaware, Maryland, New York, and the Commonwealth of Virginia met the “relaxed” requirements for standing to bring the procedural claim on appeal. California v. Azar, 911 F.3d 558, 571 (9th Cir. 2018). The Court also ruled in favor of the States on their procedural claims, holding that the IFRs likely violated the notice and comment provisions of the APA. Id. at 575-78. The Ninth Circuit also held that a nationwide injunction was inappropriate and limited the injunction to the plaintiff States. Id. at 582-84.

D. The Final Rule and ongoing proceedings

The agencies received comments and reviewed them over a period of several months. They then finalized the religious exemption in a final rule that took effect on January 14, 2019. 83 Fed. Reg. 57,536 (Nov. 15, 2018) (Final Rule). Following the publication of the Final Rule, the States submitted a second amended complaint joining more plaintiff States, including Connecticut, the District of Columbia, Hawaii, Illinois, Minnesota, North Carolina, Rhode Island, Vermont, and Washington. Dkt.

170. The States brought a second motion for a preliminary injunction, arguing that the Final Rule violates substantive provisions of the APA, and that the Final Rule is tainted by the lack of comment on the IFRs. Dkt. 174. This Court granted that motion. Dkt. 234. The agencies and both Defendant-Intervenors appealed the preliminary injunction to the Ninth Circuit, which will hear argument on June 6. California v. Azar, No. 19-15072 (9th Cir. docketed Jan. 14, 2019). Oregon moved separately to intervene. Dkt. 210 (Jan. 7, 2019). The Court granted that motion. Dkt. 274 (Feb. 1, 2019). Oregon submitted its own complaint, Dkt. 287 (Feb. 21, 2019), and filed a motion to be included in the Court's preliminary injunction, which is pending. Dkt. 288, (Feb. 21, 2019). Oregon joined the States' motion for summary judgment. The States have thus far submitted no evidence of any employer who will drop coverage as a result of the Final Rule and identified no women who stand to lose coverage as a result of the Final Rule.

ARGUMENT

I. The States lack Article III standing.

A. The States lack standing to bring Establishment Clause or Equal Protection claims.

In over a year and a half of litigation, the States have cited no authority for the idea that states can bring Establishment Clause claims against the federal government to challenge a religious accommodation. Since the States challenge a federal exemption rather than an expenditure, they cannot have offended observer or taxpayer standing in relation to the federal government.

Similarly, states are not "person[s]" under the Fifth Amendment capable of asserting an equal protection claim. Premo v. Martin, 119 F.3d 764, 771 (9th Cir. 1997) (citing South Carolina v. Katzenbach, 383 U.S. 301, 323-24 (1996)); Bd. of Nat. Res. of State of Wash. v. Brown, 992 F.2d 937, 942 (9th Cir. 1993) ("States as states clearly are not persons for Fifth Amendment purposes.").

B. The States lack injury in fact.

The Plaintiff States have not submitted evidence sufficient to establish Article III standing at the summary judgment stage. In order to establish Article III standing, Plaintiffs cannot rely on “mere allegations,” but must provide “specific facts,” that show an injury, fairly traceable to the challenged action, that is redressable by a decision from the court. Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561, (1992); see also Braunstein v. Arizona Dep’t of Transp., 683 F.3d 1177, 1184 (9th Cir. 2012).⁹ The States present no additional evidence that they will be harmed by the Final Rules with their motion for summary judgment, much less that the alleged harms are attributable to the defendants. Instead, they continue to fail to identify any employers who are not protected by current court injunctions and who plan to take advantage of the Final Rules. They offer no “specific facts” at this stage to support their theory of harm. If, at this stage of the litigation, the States are still unable to identify a single employer who will drop coverage, or a single woman who will turn to the States to fund her coverage, this confirms what the Little Sisters said all along: the States’ alleged injury is too speculative to satisfy Article III standing. See Opp’n to Mot. for Prelim. Inj. at 6-10, Dkt. 75; Little Sisters’ Opening Br. at 26-40, California v. Azar, 911 F.3d 558 (9th Cir. 2018) (No. 18-15144), Dkt. 13; Little Sisters’ Reply Br. at 27-34, California, 911 F.3d 558, Dkt. 90.

C. The States’ claimed injury would not be redressable.

Adding to the problems with the States’ alleged injury, an order enjoining the Final Rule would also not redress the claimed harm. Religious objectors can bring their own RFRA lawsuits and obtain ⁹ On a motion to dismiss, the court “accept[s] as true” the complaint’s allegations, and “construe[s] the complaint in favor of the complaining party.” Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 501 (1975). But the States lack standing under either standard, because they have “fail[ed] to allege an injury that fairly can be traced to [the agencies’] challenged action.” Simon v. E. Ky. Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 45 n. 25 (1976).

1 injunctions, given that the government has admitted that it has no compelling interest in enforcing the 2 underlying mandate and cannot in good faith assert an affirmative defense they disagree with in court.
3 Or they can join existing classes that already have injunctions against the mandate. See supra note 6.
4 Or, since many religious employers have fewer than fifty employees, they can simply drop health
5 insurance altogether. 26 U.S.C. § 4980H(c)(2).

6 Furthermore, before the Fourth IFR and the Final Rule were issued, the regulations contained
7 variations from the mandate in the form of an exemption for churches and integrated auxiliaries and a
8 separate so-called “accommodation” for other religious employers. That accommodation is central to 9 the States’ case, because without it, the mandate violates Hobby Lobby. Hobby Lobby, 573 U.S. 682.
10 Yet—according to the States’ reasoning—the earlier exemption and accommodation violate the APA.
11 The States argue that the ACA authorized the agencies to determine only “which additional preventive 12 care services” must be covered, not who must provide the coverage, and that the agencies do not have 13 statutory authority to create exemptions to the preventive services mandate. Mot. 17 (emphasis added).
14 But the States also request that the Court replace the Final Rule with the mandate as it existed before
15 the IFRs.

16 That relief—the revival of the prior mandate regime, complete with the “accommodation” and 17 religious employer exemption—cannot be entered consistent with an order that the Final Rules are 18 insufficient for the same reasons that regime is. If HRSA has no authority to decide who must provide 19 the coverage, then it surely has no authority to exempt some employers, “accommodate” others, and 20 impose new obligations on insurers and TPAs to comply in their place. Yet that is precisely the regime
21 the States ask this Court to reimpose.

For these reasons, the States lack standing, and the Second Amended Complaint and Complaints in Intervention should be dismissed, or the Court should enter summary judgment in favor of Defendants.

II. The Plaintiffs cannot prevail on their claims that the Final Rule is substantively invalid.

A. The Final Rule does not violate the ACA.

1. The agencies may make exemptions from a contraceptive mandate that they were never obligated to create.

The States argue that the Final Rule is contrary to law, reasoning that the agencies lacked authority to create the religious exemption from the contraceptive mandate. But the ACA did not require any contraceptive mandate in the first place, which makes the States' anti-exemption argument absurd. The relevant statutory section says nothing about contraception. The ACA merely requires certain employers to offer "a group health plan" that provides coverage for women's "preventive care and screenings." 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a)(4); 26 U.S.C. § 9815; 29 U.S.C. § 1185d. Congress did not specify what "preventive care" means, but instead delegated that task to HRSA. HRSA, in turn, had discretion to articulate "guidelines" the agency wished to "support[]" for this purpose. 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a)(4); see 2011 Preventive Services Guidelines.

Thus, HRSA was under no obligation to include contraceptives in the preventive services regulations at all, much less all FDA-approved contraceptives. HRSA could have limited the guidelines to other preventive services such as domestic violence screening and well-woman visits, made no mention of contraceptives, and have still faithfully implemented the "preventive care" requirement. See 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a)(4); 2011 Preventive Services Guidelines.

The States argue that the language of the statute did not include delegation of authority to create exemptions from the preventive care mandate, Mot. 17, but if Congress meant for HRSA to simply

1 create a list of covered items from which there could be no deviation, it could have said so. It did just 2 this for subsections (1) and (2) of Section 300gg-13:

3 (1) evidence-based items or services that have in effect a rating of “A” or “B” in the current
 4 recommendations of the United States Preventive Services Task Force;

5 (2) immunizations that have in effect a recommendation from the Advisory Committee on 6 Immunization Practices of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention with respect to 7 the individual involved;

8 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13. These provisions require coverage of all “items or services” on a particular list,
 9 or all immunizations, if recommended “with respect to the individual involved.” Id. The language used 10 in (4) is markedly different: “such additional preventive care and screenings . . . (1) as provided for in 11 comprehensive guidelines” from HRSA. 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(4). Since it is “presume[d] that the 12 ordinary meaning of the words chosen by Congress accurately express its legislative intent,” the 13 distinction between these provisions indicates a broader grant of discretion to HRSA in crafting the 14 regulations. Santiago Salgado v. Garcia, 384 F.3d 769, 771 (9th Cir. 2004) (internal quotation marks 15 and citation omitted).

16 Under the States’ interpretation, the agencies had no flexibility in determining how to apply the 17 preventive services mandate. Mot. 17-18. But HHS has used its discretion to delimit the guidelines
 18 since the earliest implementation of the preventive services mandate, and not just on contraceptives.
 19 For all preventive services, HRSA has exercised discretion to “specify the frequency, method, 20 treatment, or setting for the provision of that service,” and has directed that if such information is not 21 specified, “the plan or issuer can use reasonable medical management techniques to determine any 22 coverage limitations.” Centers for Consumer Information & Insurance Oversight, Affordable Care Act
 23 Implementation FAQs – Set 12, Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services, 24 <https://go.cms.gov/2I54sZV> (last visited May 31, 2019). HRSA has also created age limits in its recommendations. For example, in average-risk women, HPV screenings are only covered for those age 30 and older, and mammograms are only covered for those age 40 and older. States’ Ex. 20 (D9 666668) (HRSA, Women’s Preventive Services Guidelines, U.S. Dep’t of Health & Human Servs. (Oct. 2017)). HRSA has been exercising its statutory discretion to delimit coverage requirements for years, and the States have not claimed that it is contrary to law to limit preventive services by age (a limitation not found in Section 300gg-13(a)(4)), nor that it is improper to utilize “reasonable medical management techniques” to determine exclusions from coverage.

The upshot is that HRSA could have required coverage of some contraceptives and not others, permitted employers to exclude coverage of some contraceptives due to cost considerations (which it in fact does),¹⁰ or determined that a contraception mandate was unnecessary due to widespread coverage pre-dating the ACA. Indeed, since the listing of contraceptives itself is not in the Code of Federal Regulations and has never been subject to formal rulemaking, HRSA could edit its website tomorrow to eliminate some or all contraceptives from the list, and the States would have no recourse. To claim that the agencies have no authority to create exemptions from the mandate in these circumstances is weaving new administrative law from whole cloth.

The States proceed as if those guidelines must delineate an inflexible list of covered services. See Mot. 17-18. In reality, the guidelines specify what preventive services must be covered and to whom those services should apply. The “comprehensive guidelines” for mandatory minimum coverage for children’s preventive care, sharing a subsection and a “shall” with the women’s preventive care section, provide an analogue. Compare 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a)(3) with (a)(4). Those guidelines make a variety of age- and individual-circumstance-based recommendations which note that “variations,

1 taking into account individual circumstances, may be appropriate,” and “[recommended procedures]
2 may be modified, depending on entry point into schedule and individual need.” Bright
3 Futures/American Academy of Pediatrics, Recommendations for Preventive Pediatric Health Care
4 (2019), https://www.aap.org/en-us/Documents/periodicity_schedule.pdf (children’s preventive care 5 guidelines).

6 Nowhere does the statute tell HRSA to include contraceptives in the guidelines; it would be strange 7 indeed if the agencies had the discretionary power to create a nationwide contraceptive mandate but 8 not the discretionary power to frame that mandate to balance competing interests. Indeed, that is how 9 HRSA has understood its discretion from Day 1. See 76 Fed. Reg. at 46,623 (“In the Departments’
10 view, it is appropriate that HRSA, in issuing these Guidelines, takes into account the effect on the 11 religious beliefs of certain religious employers if coverage of contraceptive services were required in 12 the group health plans in which employees in certain religious positions participate.”).

13 The States argue that it would “be untenable practically” for Congress to “enumerate the specific 14 services contained” in the mandate. Mot. 17 n.22. Not so. Just two subsections away from the 15 preventive services mandate, Congress prohibited cost-sharing requirements for “evidence-based 16 items or services that have in effect a rating of ‘A’ or ‘B’ in the current recommendations of the United 17 States Preventive Services Task Force” or “immunizations that have in effect a recommendation from 18 the [relevant advisory committee] with respect to the individual involved.” 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-
19 13(a)(1)-(2). Congress could have also guaranteed women “all FDA-approved contraceptives.” But 20 Congress instead permitted HRSA to balance competing interests like expanding contraceptive access 21 and protecting religious exercise.

22 The States point to an entirely unrelated section prohibiting the government from punishing,
23 among others, hospitals that do not conduct “mercy killing[s],” 42 U.S.C. § 18113, from which they 24

1 derive the negative implication that there are no other statutory exemptions for religious entities in the 2 entire ACA. Mot. 18. Though the ACA nowhere mandates euthanasia coverage (the practice was 3 illegal in forty-eight states at the time the ACA was enacted), the States call section 18113 a “statutory 4 exemption” for “religious object[ors].” Id.

5 That towering inference misapplies the negative implication canon, which applies when the 6 exception specified can reasonably be thought to express all exceptions to the prohibition involved.
 7 See, e.g., United States v. Giordano, 416 U.S. 505, 514 (1974) (executive assistant cannot exercise
 8 wiretap authority delegated to the “Attorney General” and “any Assistant Attorney General specially 9 designated by the Attorney General”); see also A. Scalia & B. Garner, Reading Law 107 (2012).
 10 Section 18113 has nothing to do with preventive care or HRSA’s discretion to craft preventive services
 11 policy, and therefore does not foreclose HRSA’s discretion to not impose contraceptive coverage
 12 obligations on religious entities, particularly when RFRA explicitly applies to every government
 13 “agency, instrumentality, and official.” 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-2(1).¹¹

14 The better reading of the statute—shared by both administrations to oversee the ACA—is that 15 HRSA can decide not to impose certain coverage requirements on religious entities, provided that the 16 scope of the exemption is not arbitrary and capricious. Though the States insist that arbitrary-and-
 17 capricious review is not a meaningful limit, Mot. 20 (arguing “[u]nder their interpretation, [the

1 agencies] . . . could exempt all employers from” section 300gg-13(a)(4)), they offer no defense of the
 2 religious exemption imposed at the same time as the Mandate.¹²

3 2. The States’ reasoning, if accepted, would also invalidate the preexisting religious employer
 4 exemption and “accommodation.”

5 The States’ APA argument also proves too much. If the agencies had authority only to determine
 6 “which additional preventive care services” must be covered, the agencies lacked the authority to issue
 7 the 2011 religious employer exemption, or to create a complex “accommodation” system, upon which
 8 the States rely for their analysis. Mot. 17 (emphasis added); 76 Fed. Reg. at 46,626. If HHS had no
 9 power to exempt some employers from the Mandate, then it has no choice but to impose the Mandate 10 on houses of worship.

11 Under the States’ theory of agency authority, the religious employer exemption cannot be cured
 12 simply because it refers to the Internal Revenue Code. See Mot. 9. Nothing in the ACA incorporates
 13 the Internal Revenue church exemption into the preventive services mandate. Nor is there anything
 14 special about the Internal Revenue Code: federal law has different ways to identify religious 15 organizations. See, e.g., 42 U.S.C. § 290kk (“a nonprofit religious organization”); 10 C.F.R. § 5.205
 16 (educational institutions can self-identify as religious organizations). And federal law contains a 17 variety of religious exemptions, any of which the agencies could have selected to rely upon here, such 18 as Title VII’s religious employer exemption or Title IX’s exemption for religious educational 19 institutions.¹³

20 ¹² On appeal, the States argued that the church exemption is not arbitrary and capricious because it is 21 “narrow[.]” and is mirrored by a provision in the Internal Revenue Code. States’ Br. at 35, California
v. Azar, Nos. 19-15072 (9th Cir. Apr. 15, 2019).

22 ¹³ See, e.g., 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-1(a) (“This subchapter shall not apply to . . . a religious corporation,
 23 association, educational institution, or society with respect to the employment of individuals of a 24 particular religion to perform work connected with the carrying on by such corporation, association,

1 The States offer no reason why the agencies would have authority to create a religious employer
 2 exemption based on a snippet of unrelated tax code (which by no means purports to define religious
 3 organizations), see 26 U.S.C. § 6033(a)(3)(C) (referring in the same section to “religious organization”
 4 as a different category), but lack the authority to adopt the exemption in the Final Rule. Indeed, the 5 States attempted to defend the church exemption at the preliminary injunction stage and on appeal,
 6 but they now make no arguments that the church exemption is valid at all. Compare Mot. 9 (“In
 7 creating the church exemption, Defendants did not identify any provision in the ACA authorizing them
 8 to create such an exemption.”), with States’ Br. at 35-36, California v. Azar, No. 19-15072 (9th Cir.
 9 Apr. 15, 2019), Dkt. 72 (church exemption is “narrowly crafted and tethered to the Internal Revenue
 10 Code” and “based on . . . governmental recognition of a particular sphere of autonomy for houses of 11 worship.”) (quoting 80 Fed. Reg. at 41,325); Reply ISO Mot. Prelim. Inj. at 9, Dkt. 218 (same).

12 Perhaps the States recognized that their theories are insufficient. A reference to the religious 13 employer doctrine in Hosanna-Tabor is a poor fit for justifying the religious exemption since it would 14 cover religious orders like the Little Sisters and other groups not previously exempt, and would not
 15 function as a blanket exception for all church employees. See Hosanna-Tabor Evangelical Lutheran
 16 Church & Sch. v. EEOC, 565 U.S. 171, 190-94 (2012) (discussing indicia of ministerial role). And 17 whether “churches are more likely to hire co-religionists,” States’ Br. at 35-36, California, No. 19-
 18 15072, Dkt. 72, is irrelevant to the underlying question of authority to create a regulatory exception.
 19 In any case, if the Mandate violates the Free Exercise Clause when applied to all employers, and since 20 the States think the agency has no statutory authority to make distinctions, the only plausible legal

21 _____
 22 educational institution, or society of its activities.”); 20 U.S.C. § 1681(a)(3) (“this section shall not 23 apply to an educational institution which is controlled by a religious organization if the application of 24 this subsection would not be consistent with the religious tenets of such organization”); 42 U.S.C.
 § 290kk(c)(6) (“The term ‘religious organization’ means a nonprofit religious organization.”).

1 result of the States’ argument would be that the agencies are barred from having any contraceptive
2 mandate at all.

3 Nor do the agencies explain how the federal government could justify the so-called 4 accommodation under their theories. The agencies cannot simultaneously lack power to make 5 exemptions from the Mandate and also offer an accommodation that allows objectors to “opt out” of 6 that Mandate. See infra Part II.A.3.b (substantial burden); Mot. 10, 25. Either the accommodation
7 itself is an exemption (and therefore unlawful in the States’ view because the agencies lack authority
8 to create exemptions) or the accommodation is not a pure “opt out” but a separate obligation. The 9 States’ analysis relies on the accommodation in its determination that the Final Rule is not required
10 by RFRA. But if the accommodation is really an “opt out,” the States have offered no explanation as 11 to how the agencies had authority to implement it under the ACA, but somehow lacked authority to 12 issue the Final Rule at issue here.

13 Further, if the States prevail, the underlying Mandate would be impermissible under the Free
14 Exercise and Establishment Clauses, which prohibit the government from making such “explicit and 15 deliberate distinctions between different religious organizations.” Larson v. Valente, 456 U.S. 228, 16 246 n.23 (1982) (striking down laws that created differential treatment between “well-established
17 churches” and “churches which are new and lacking in a constituency”). In that system, some religious 18 organizations get exemptions (primarily churches and their “integrated auxiliaries”), and some do not.
19 That rule exempts religious orders which engage in what the government deems “exclusively religious”
20 activities. See 78 Fed. Reg. at 39,874 (limiting exemption to the “exclusively religious activities of 21 any religious order”). But it does not exempt religious orders that, because of their faith, engage in 22 activities the government deems not “exclusively religious,” such as serving the elderly poor.

1 By preferring certain churches and religious orders to other types of religious orders and
2 organizations, the mandate inappropriately “interfer[es] with an internal . . . decision that affects the 3 faith and mission” of a religious organization. Hosanna-Tabor, 565 U.S. at 190. Doing so also requires 4 illegal “discrimination . . . [among religious institutions] expressly based on the degree of religiosity
5 of the institution and the extent to which that religiosity affects its operations[.]” Colo. Christian Univ.
6 v. Weaver, 534 F.3d 1245, 1259 (10th Cir. 2008) (applying Larson to invalidate distinction between 7 “sectarian” and “pervasively sectarian” organizations). And it does all of this when discriminating
8 between religious organizations that all qualify for the ministerial exception upon which the States
9 base their argument. Shaliehsabou v. Hebrew Home of Greater Washington, Inc., 363 F.3d 299, 310
10 (4th Cir. 2004) (holding that a religious entity qualifies for the ministerial exception “whenever that 11 entity’s mission is marked by clear or obvious religious characteristics”). This Court cannot require 12 the government to enforce an underlying regulation that, under the same reasoning by which it strikes 13 down the current regulations, is unlawful.

14 3. The agencies are permitted to issue the Final Rule to comply with RFRA.

15 Faced with dozens of injunctions and multiple Supreme Court orders preventing them from 16 enforcing the underlying mandate—which was the exact state of play when the Supreme Court vacated
17 the appellate rulings in Zubik—the agencies could not be expected to maintain a rule that violated all
18 of those injunctions, much less to continue advancing an affirmative defense of strict scrutiny they no
19 longer believed. Their resulting attempt to comply with the Religious Freedom Restoration Act and 20 stop asserting that affirmative defense is perfectly compatible with agencies’ obligation and authority
21 to interpret their own rules in accordance with Congressional commands.

1 a. RFRA applies broadly to federal laws and federal agencies.

2 RFRA requires that the federal government “shall not substantially burden a person’s exercise of 3 religion” unless doing so is the “least restrictive means” of advancing a “compelling governmental
4 interest.” 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-1(a)-(b). RFRA is not just a judicial remedy. Instead, it constrains every 5 “agency,” “all Federal law, and the implementation of that law, whether statutory or otherwise,”
6 including the agencies’ actions under the ACA. 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000bb-2, 2000bb-3. Simply put,
7 whenever the federal government acts, it must obey RFRA.

8 b. The Mandate as it existed before the Fourth IFR violates RFRA and the Constitution.

9 In enacting RFRA, Congress also made clear that “religious exercise” is a broad term,
10 encompassing “any exercise of religion.” 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-5. Religious exercise includes “‘not only 11 belief and profession but the performance of (or abstention from) physical acts’ that are ‘engaged in 12 for religious reasons.’” Hobby Lobby, 573 U.S. at 710 (quoting Emp’t Div. v. Smith, 494 U.S. 872, 13 877 (1990)).

14 Substantial burden. The substantial burden inquiry of RFRA is a simple two-part question:
15 whether a religious belief is sincerely held and, if so, whether the government is “putting substantial
16 pressure on an adherent” to act contrary to that belief. Thomas v. Review Bd., 450 U.S. 707, 717-18
17 (1981); see Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 404 (1963) (“the pressure upon [a Seventh-day
18 Adventist] to forego [abstaining from Saturday work] is unmistakable”); see also Hobby Lobby, 573
19 U.S. at 695 n.3 (RFRA restored “Sherbert line of cases” and arguably “provide[s] even broader 20 protection”).

21 The Little Sisters and other religious groups exercise religion by providing health insurance that 22 complies with their religious beliefs. See Decl. of Mother Superior McCarthy ¶¶ 35-51, Dkt. 38-3. The 23 States concede that these groups have a sincere religious objection to complying with the

1 “accommodation.” Id. ¶¶ 35-38; Mot. 22 (“The States do not question the sincerity of religious
 2 employers’ beliefs”). The States’ substantial burden analysis, however, relies on a novel interpretation
 3 of RFRA. The States argue that “sincerely held religious beliefs cannot—in and of themselves—
 4 answer the legal question of whether a law imposes a substantial burden under RFRA.” Mot. 22. But 5 no one argues otherwise. Nor have the defendants argued that courts should “treat sincerely held 6 beliefs and substantial burden as one and the same.” Mot. 24.

7 While it is of course true that courts and government cannot second-guess whether a particular
 8 religious belief is “correct,” the substantial burden inquiry focuses not on the “correctness” of a 9 believer’s view that she cannot engage in certain conduct, but rather on the coercive force applied by 10 the government. As the States acknowledge, once a concededly-sincere religious belief is established 11 (as here), the question is whether the religious objectors are “coerced to act contrary to their religious 12 beliefs by the threat of civil or criminal sanctions,” Mot. 21 (quoting Navajo Nation v. U.S. Forest 13 Serv., 535 F.3d 1058, 1069-70 (9th Cir. 2008) (en banc)).

14 Here, the accommodation depends on religious objectors contracting with their insurer or TPA to 15 provide contraceptive coverage through their own plan infrastructure. Failure to comply with the 16 mandate, either outright or via the accommodation, would result in large fines under 26 U.S.C.
 17 § 4980D ($100/day per person) and 26 U.S.C. § 4980H(c)(1) ($2000 per employee, per year)—the 18 same fines that constituted a substantial burden in Hobby Lobby. 573 U.S. at 691 (“If these 19 consequences do not amount to a substantial burden, it is hard to see what would.”). For the Little 20 Sisters, that penalty would add up to $3 million per year. Decl. of Mother Superior McCarthy, Dkt.
 21 38-3, ¶¶ 40-43. This is no “de minimis burden.” Mot. 26 (quoting Eternal Word Television Network, 22 Inc. v. HHS, 818 F.3d 1122, 1150 (11th Cir. 2016), vacated, 2016 WL 11503064 (11th Cir. May 31, 23 2016), modified, 2016 WL 11504187 (11th Cir. Oct. 3, 2016)); see Hobby Lobby, 573 U.S. at 726

1 (“Because the contraceptive mandate forces them to pay an enormous sum of money” for following
2 their beliefs, “the mandate clearly imposes a substantial burden on those beliefs.”).

3 Rather than address the burden’s magnitude, the States argue that there is no substantial burden 4 because “the accommodation process meticulously separates the employer’s health plan from any 5 involvement in the provisions of contraceptive coverage.” Mot. 26. As the States see it, the Little
6 Sisters just should not believe that participation in the system violates their faith, because the coverage
7 is separate in a way that should alleviate the Sisters’ moral qualms. But this argument is akin to telling 8 an Orthodox Jew that it is okay to flip a light switch she feels forbidden from flipping on the Sabbath.
9 The States offer no authority for the notion that courts can second-guess a believer’s understanding 10 that conduct is forbidden to her.

11 But in any case, despite using the word “separate,” Mot. 26, the States actually do not dispute the 12 crucial fact that the accommodation works by using the employer’s plan. Religious objectors are 13 required to execute Form 700, obligating their insurer to provide contraceptives to their employees
14 through their plan infrastructure. 45 C.F.R. § 147.131(d). Or they must alternately inform HHS in 15 writing not only of their religious objection, but also of the “name and type” of their plan, along with 16 contact information for the health insurance issuers, and must keep HHS updated with changes to that 17 information. 45 C.F.R. § 147.131(d)(1)(ii). In the case of religious entities with a self-insured plan—
18 that is, a plan where the financial risk of claims is not borne by an insurance company—the notification
19 via Form 700 or directly to HHS serves to “designate the relevant [TPA] as plan administrator,” a role
20 a TPA does not normally have, and that requires legal authority from the employer, such that the 21 notification becomes “an instrument under which the plan is operated.” 79 Fed. Reg. at 51,095. That 22 is not simply “opting out.” Mot. 21. It is using legal authority to authorize and obligate a TPA to use 23 the religious organization’s plan to provide coverage.

1 Regardless of the plan type, the regulations themselves announced that they relied on the 2 employer’s “coverage administration infrastructure” to achieve the Mandate’s coverage goal. 80 Fed.
 3 Reg. 41,318, 41,328 (July 14, 2015). The third-party administrator would contact all plan participants,
 4 identify them by “payroll location,” and perform “[o]ngoing, nightly feeds” of information. Joint 5 Appendix at 1220-22 (Guidestone Declaration), Zubik, 136 S. Ct. 1557, <https://bit.ly/2EOfljQ>; see
 6 also 80 Fed. Reg. at 41,328-29 (acknowledging the plan information is used to “verify the identity” of 7 beneficiaries and “provide formatted claims data for government reimbursement”).

8 Religious employers making use of the accommodation are thus forced to maintain a health plan
 9 infrastructure that includes the very coverage the employer finds religiously objectionable. See 78 Fed.
 10 Reg. at 39,876 (“plan participants and beneficiaries (and their health care providers) do not have to 11 have two separate health insurance policies (that is, the group health insurance policy and the 12 individual contraceptive coverage policy”). As the agencies and the States have conceded, “the 13 coverage provided by the TPA is, as a formal ERISA matter, part of the same ‘plan’ as the coverage
 14 provided by the employer.” Br. for the Resp’ts at 38, Zubik, 136 S. Ct. 1557 (citation omitted), 15 <https://bit.ly/2DiCj32>; States’ Br. at 46-47, California, No. 19-15072, Dkt. 72 (coverage is “part of 16 the same ERISA plan”).

17 That is why Solicitor General Verrilli conceded that contraceptive coverage must be “part of the 18 same plan as the coverage provided by the employer,” Br. for the Resp’ts at 38, Zubik, 136 S. Ct. 1557
 19 (internal quotations marks and citation omitted), <https://bit.ly/2DiCj32>; Tr. of Oral Arg. at 60-61, 20 Zubik, 136 S. Ct. 1557, <https://bit.ly/2VklhFx> (Chief Justice Roberts: “You want the coverage for 21 contraceptive services to be provided, I think as you said, seamlessly. You want it to be in one
 22 insurance package. . . . Is that a fair understanding of the case?”; Solicitor General Verrilli: “I think it
 23 is one fair understanding of the case.”). The Supreme Court itself recognized the government’s

1 “substantial clarification and refinement” in its position, Zubik, 136 S. Ct. at 1560, which is why it
 2 makes no sense for the States to rely on pre-Zubik courts of appeals decisions that were vacated as a
 3 result of Zubik. See Mot. 21.

4 Consistent with their concessions in Zubik, the agencies themselves now concede that forcing 5 religious groups to comply with the accommodation “constituted a substantial burden” on religious
 6 exercise. 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,546. That explains why federal courts have awarded at least 14
 7 injunctions—not consent decrees—to religious objectors since Zubik.¹⁴ See infra Part II.A.3.c. Each
 8 injunction required an Article III judge to determine that the movant had made “a clear showing” that
 9 the law required that “extraordinary and drastic remedy.” Mazurek v. Armstrong, 520 U.S. 968, 972 10 (1997).

11 The States thus have not shown that the Little Sisters are factually mistaken that the 12 accommodation requires their assistance; they have only argued that the Little Sisters are morally
 13 mistaken about what constitutes complicity. And civil courts do not decide theological questions. See, 14 e.g., Thomas, 450 U.S. at 715-16 (“it is not for us to say that the line [plaintiff] drew was an 15 unreasonable one”).

16 Strict scrutiny. Under RFRA, Congress permitted agencies to impose substantial burdens on 17 religion only where they could prove that imposing the burden on a particular person was the least 18 restrictive means of advancing a compelling government interest. 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-1. Here, the 19 government cannot carry that burden and, to its credit, has finally stopped trying to assert that 20

 22 ¹⁴ The States refer to “stipulated” injunctions. Mot. 46. There is no such thing. Unlike a dismissal—
 23 which can in some situations be stipulated— an injunction necessarily requires independent judicial 24 decisionmaking, since Article III power stands behind the order. That is why Rule 65 requires a court in “[e]very order granting an injunction . . . [to] state the reasons why it issued.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 65.

1 affirmative defense. See 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,546-49. The States’ attempt to revive the government’s 2 interest on its behalf fails.

3 The States ask the Court to hold that “seamless access to contraceptive coverage is a compelling
 4 government interest,” Mot. 26, which they define as coverage “without cost-sharing or additional 5 logistical or administrative hurdles,” Mot. 29. This interest—precluding any accommodation that 6 could require a patient to fill out additional paperwork—is far more prescriptive than the interest
 7 discussed in the States’ cited cases, that is, “a compelling interest in facilitating access to 8 contraception.” Mot. 27 (quoting Priests for Life v. HHS, 808 F.3d 1, 15 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (Kavanaugh, 9 J., dissenting from denial of rehearing)). The States are attempting to bootstrap their preferred means
 10 into a compelling interest. But means cannot serve as ends for purposes of strict scrutiny, regardless 11 of the context.

12 Moreover, the States cannot impose a compelling interest on the government which it does not 13 itself recognize. RFRA permits “Government” to impose a substantial burden “only if it demonstrates”
 14 that strict scrutiny is satisfied—not an interested third party. 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000bb-1(b), 2000bb-2(1)
 15 (emphasis added). Even so, the States can hardly argue a compelling interest when some of them have 16 adopted no contraceptive mandate at all—like the ones 28 states adopted prior to Hobby Lobby. Br.
 17 for the Resp’ts at 64, Zubik, 136 S. Ct. 1557, <https://bit.ly/2DiCj32>.

18 However the interest is defined, the government’s interest in requiring employers to provide 19 contraceptives cannot be “compelling” since small businesses, grandfathered plans, churches, and 20 government-sponsored plans are exempt. These existing exemptions do “appreciable damage” to any 21 alleged interest in universal seamless coverage, showing that it cannot be an interest “of the highest 22 order.” Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye, Inc. v. City of Hialeah, 508 U.S. 520, 546-47 (1993)
 23 (internal quotations marks and citation omitted). For example, the Obama Administration defended its 24

1 decision to exempt grandfathered plans because the affected women would have many other avenues
 2 to obtain coverage, including “through a family member’s employer, through an individual insurance
 3 policy purchased on an Exchange or directly from an insurer, or through Medicaid or another
 4 government program”—that is, non-seamless means. Br. for the Resp’ts at 65, Zubik, 136 S. Ct. 1557,
 5 <https://bit.ly/2DiCj32>. Similarly, the government argued that the grandfathering exemption—which 6 has covered over 49 million people, Hobby Lobby, 573 U.S. at 700—did not undercut the 7 government’s interests because “most women currently covered under grandfathered plans likely have 8 (and will continue to have) some contraceptive coverage.” Br. for the Resp’ts at 64, Zubik, 136 S. Ct.
 9 1557 (emphasis added), <https://bit.ly/2DiCj32>. These concessions are partly why the Supreme Court
 10 remanded Zubik and why the government subsequently lost every case.¹⁵

11 Even if there were a compelling interest in seamless access, the accommodation would fail strict 12 scrutiny because the government has alternatives to the forced collaboration of nuns. As the Supreme 13 Court explained, “[t]he most straightforward way” of “guaranteeing cost-free access to the [relevant]
 14 contraceptive methods . . . would be for the Government to assume the cost.” Hobby Lobby, 573 U.S.
 15 at 728. And here, the government is already attempting to provide Title X funded contraceptives for 16 women whose employers conscientiously object to contraceptive coverage. 84 Fed. Reg. 7714, 7734
 17 (Mar. 4, 2019) (enjoined on unrelated grounds, see, e.g., Opinion and Order, Oregon v. Azar, No. 6:19-18 cv-00317 (D. Or. Apr. 29, 2019), Dkt. 142; Order, Washington v. Azar, No. 1:19-cv-03040 (E.D. Wash.
 19 Apr. 25, 2019), Dkt. 54; see also Order, California v. Azar, No. 3:19-cv-01184 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 26, 20 2019), Dkt. 103 (state-wide injunction)).

 22 ¹⁵ See Mark L. Rienzi, Fool Me Twice: Zubik v. Burwell and the Perils of Judicial Faith in 23 Government Claims, 2016 Cato Sup. Ct. Rev. 123 (2015-2016) (detailing concessions leading to the 24 Zubik remand).

1 The States find fault with these efforts because they involve “discretion[]” on the part of Title X
2 projects (many administered by the States’ own amici like Planned Parenthood). But this misses the 3 mark: what matters is not whether the States agree any current program is a perfect substitute, but
4 whether less restrictive alternatives are available. Mot. 14 n.19. The States themselves attest to a range
5 of state programs that provide contraceptives. The very existence of those programs proves that a plan
6 run by nuns is not the least restrictive means of distributing contraceptives (which is presumably why
7 neither the federal government nor the States ever thought of such a scheme before 2012).

8 The States also suggest that RFRA only allows accommodations that could burden third parties if 9 “borne by the government or society as a whole.” Mot. 25. Hobby Lobby answers this objection in full,
10 explaining that “it could not reasonably be maintained that any burden on religious exercise . . . is 11 permissible under RFRA so long as the relevant legal obligation requires the religious adherent to 12 confer a benefit on third parties.” 573 U.S. at 729 n.37. Otherwise, the Court explained, Muslim
13 supermarkets could be mandated to sell alcohol or Jewish restaurants mandated to open on Saturdays
14 for others’ benefit, with no protection under RFRA. Id.

15 Here, the “third-party harm” is not the result of the religious objector seeking to have 16 contraceptives banned (or alcohol or Saturday work), but because the government has chosen to force
17 third parties to distribute a product. The States thus have it backward when they suggest that women
18 will be forced to “bear the cost of their employers’ religious views about contraceptives.” Mot. 21, 30.
19 The Little Sisters’ beliefs about contraceptives are cost-free; the “cost” comes in because the 20 government initially chose the Little Sisters, rather than some other delivery method, to provide such 21 coverage. Per Hobby Lobby, the burdens on third parties are properly considered under the compelling
22 interest test, not as a separate exception to RFRA. 573 U.S. at 731-32. As described above, that interest 23 is not compelling here.

c. After Zubik, courts have unanimously found the Mandate as applied to religious employers violated RFRA.

Since the Supreme Court's Zubik order, every single religious employer case that has been litigated to conclusion has resulted in a permanent injunction. Those injunctions all include conclusions of law under Rule 65 that a RFRA violation and forbid the agencies from enforcing the mandate. For example:

- Wheaton Coll. v. Azar, No. 1:13-cv-8910 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 22, 2018), Dkt. 119 at 3 (“enforcement of the contraceptive mandate against Wheaton would violate Wheaton’s rights under” RFRA);
- Little Sisters of the Poor v. Azar, No. 1:13-cv-02611 (D. Colo. May 29, 2018), Dkt. 82 at 1-2 (“enforcement of the mandate against Plaintiffs, either through the accommodation or other regulatory means . . . violated and would violate the Religious Freedom Restoration Act”);
- Reaching Souls Int’l, Inc. v. Azar, No. 13-cv-01092 (W.D. Okla. Mar. 15, 2018), Dkt. 95 at 3-4 (“enforcement of the contraceptive mandate against Plaintiffs . . . violated and would violate RFRA”).

These post-Zubik injunctions join dozens of pre-Zubik injunctions in which federal judges found, over HHS’s objection, that the prior system violates RFRA. All told, more than 50 RFRA-based injunctions continue to bind the federal agencies. See supra notes 4 & 5.

d. Where courts are divided, government has discretion to err on the side of not violating civil rights.

Since federal agencies have to implement national policy for all 50 states, it was at least a reasonable act of discretion for the agencies to comply with multiple injunctions and err on the side of not burdening religious liberty. RFRA is more than a judicial remedy; it “applies to all Federal law.” 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-3. See also 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-2(1) (“the term ‘government’ includes a[n] agency . . . of the United States.”). When agencies implement federal law, they are necessarily implementing RFRA, and they are duty-bound to obey it. Accordingly, the Office of Legal Counsel has advised agencies that they can accommodate persons who they have reason to believe will face a

1 substantial burden on religious exercise. See, e.g., Application of the Religious Freedom Restoration
 2 Act to the Award of a Grant Pursuant to the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act, 31 Op.
 3 O.L.C. 162, 176-77 (2007); cf. Charitable Choice Regulations Applicable to States Receiving
 4 Substance Abuse Prevention and Treatment Block Grants, 68 Fed. Reg. 56,430, 56,435 (Sept. 30, 5 2003).

6 So too, here, the agencies were correct to the extent they erred on the side of protecting religious 7 exercise under RFRA. This is particularly true because more than 50 federal courts have entered
 8 RFRA-based injunctions. That is why Congress made the Establishment Clause—not judicial 9 pronouncements on the substantial burden test—the outer limit on exemptions: “Granting . . .
 10 exemptions, to the extent permissible under the Establishment Clause, shall not constitute a violation
 11 of this chapter.” 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-4. RFRA thereby expresses Congress’s intent that federal 12 agencies be allowed some leeway when accommodating religious exercise. Thus, the Final Rule is 13 well within the discretion committed to HHS under the ACA and RFRA.

14 4. Section 1554 of the ACA does not prohibit the Final Rule.

15 Congress itself (a) chose not to mandate contraceptive coverage at all but left the matter entirely
 16 to HRSA’s discretion, and (b) chose to allow grandfathered plans serving tens of millions of women
 17 to not cover preventive services. In light of these choices, it makes no sense to suggest that the ACA 18 treats failure to extend a mandate to each and every potential employer as “creat[ing] an[]
 19 unreasonable barrier[]” or “imped[ing] timely access to health care.” 42 U.S.C. § 18114. See Mot. 35-
 20 36. Furthermore, in light of (a) the existing injunctions, (b) the wide availability of contraceptives
 21 generally, and (c) Title X programs available to provide contraceptives, the Final Rule does not create 22 an unreasonable barrier or impede timely access.

5. Section 1557 of the ACA does not prohibit the Final Rule.

The States claim that the Final Rule violates section 1557 of the ACA, Mot. 36-37, which prohibits discrimination “on the ground prohibited under . . . title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972.” 42 U.S.C. § 18116(a). But Title IX does not apply to organizations “controlled by a religious organization if the application of this subsection would not be consistent with the religious tenets of such organization.” 20 U.S.C. § 1681(a)(3). Therefore, an exemption which protects religious organizations cannot be inconsistent with Section 1557, since Section 1557 itself incorporates the broad religious exemption scheme of Title IX. See Franciscan All., Inc. v. Burwell, 227 F. Supp. 3d 660, 690 (N.D. Tex. 2016) (noting both religious and abortion-related exemptions).

By the States’ reasoning, every change to the women’s preventive services mandate violates Section 1557, and the very Mandate itself—which treats women different from men—violates Section 1557. Such an absurd result cannot have been Congress’s intent; and if the Court finds otherwise, the entire Mandate must be struck down.

B. The Final Rule is not arbitrary and capricious.

Arbitrary and capricious review requires that “an agency ‘examine the relevant data and articulate a satisfactory explanation for its action.’” FCC v. Fox Television Stations, Inc., 556 U.S. 502, 513 (2009) (quoting Motor Vehicle Mfrs. Ass’n of U.S., Inc. v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 463 U.S. 29, 43 (1983)); see id. at 515 (agency “need not demonstrate to a court’s satisfaction that the reasons for the new policy are better than the reasons for the old one”).

The agencies’ rule change was fully justified by a factual finding and a logical conclusion, both of which were reasonable and explained. First, the agencies found they were mistaken to conclude previously that the “accommodation” regulatory mechanism functioned as an opt-out for religious

1 employers. Second, the Mandate—regulatory mechanism or not—burdened religious employers, and 2 those burdens could not be justified without clear evidence that the burdens served the intended interest.

3 The “accommodation” as an Opt-Out. The agencies had previously described the accommodation
4 in litigation as simply “opting out” of contraceptive coverage. See Br. for the Resp’ts at 25, Zubik, 136
5 S. Ct. 1557, <https://bit.ly/2DiCj32>. In the Final Rule, the agencies explained why that was mistaken.
6 “In the past, the Departments had stated in our regulations and court briefs,” as in Zubik, “that the 7 previous accommodation process required contraceptive coverage or payments in a way that is 8 ‘seamless’ with the coverage provided by the objecting employer.” 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,544. Put 9 differently, the accommodation’s actual structure continued to require employers to provide plans with 10 objectionable coverage, even if payments were segregated—meaning it failed to “accommodate” any 11 theological concerns about complicity not tied to a specific financing structure. “As a result, in 12 significant respects, that previous accommodation process did not actually accommodate the 13 objections of many entities, as many entities with religious objections have argued.” 83 Fed. Reg. at 14 57,544.

15 Burden Not Justified by Compelling Interest. As the agencies recognized, employers being made
16 to choose between “significant penalties” and involvement with contraceptive coverage in a manner
17 “inconsistent with their religious observance or practice” was the precise “substantial burden identified 18 by the Supreme Court in Hobby Lobby.” 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,545-46. As such, the agencies had the 19 burden to show a compelling interest served by enforcing the Mandate against religious objectors, and 20 that the accommodation-modified Mandate was the least restrictive means of serving the interest. And 21 they reasonably concluded that if the link between the Mandate and contraceptive access and use was 22 “not clear,” so too was the link between the Mandate and any compelling interest in ensuring 23 widespread contraceptive access and use. See 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,556. The agencies also recognized

1 that any interest in denying the exception to religious objectors specifically—RFRA’s “burden to the 2 person” inquiry, 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-1(b)—was further reduced by the fact that “many or most women
3 potentially affected by the expanded exemptions . . . may not be impacted by these rules at all” in light
4 of other exceptions and a growing number of permanent injunctions that prevented the Mandate’s
5 application. 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,550. The agencies also provided legal analysis on the substantial burden
6 question, particularly on why an interest in “seamlessness” would likely fail the Supreme Court’s
7 standards for a compelling interest, 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,548 (detailing damage to that interest under 8 current law). Given the agencies’ factual conclusions that the benefits of denying religious exemptions
9 were highly uncertain, the agencies’ final decision to grant exemptions under RFRA was far from 10 arbitrary. Further, the States’ own declarations undercut the idea that allowing a few more employers
11 to access a religious exemption would undercut the interests served by the Mandate, given that those 12 declarations tout the comprehensive effectiveness of a system that has always incorporated broader 13 exemptions. See, e.g., Kost Decl. at 14, Dkt. 174-19 (“[T]he ACA’s contraceptive coverage mandate
14 has had its intended effect of removing cost barriers to obtaining contraception.”); Custer Decl. at 6, 15 Dkt. 174-6 (thirty-year low in pregnancies); Skinner Decl. at 11, Dkt. 174-32 (“dramatic decrease in 16 the numbers of unintended pregnancies, teen births and abortions”).

17 C. The Final Rule does not violate the Establishment Clause.

18 RFRA authorizes the government to grant “exemptions, to the extent permissible under the 19 Establishment Clause.” 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-4. The States have argued that the Final Rule violates the 20 Establishment Clause. Mot. 51-54. Yet, over six years of hard-fought litigation, not the Obama
21 Administration, nor the lower federal courts, nor any Supreme Court Justice took the view that 22 granting relief to religious organizations would violate the Establishment Clause. And with good 23 reason: the Final Rule easily passes Establishment Clause muster under any test.

First, under the Supreme Court’s most recent precedent, “the Establishment Clause must be interpreted ‘by reference to historical practices and understandings.’” Town of Greece v. Galloway, 572 U.S. 565, 576 (2014) (quoting County of Allegheny v. ACLU Greater Pittsburgh Chapter, 492 U.S. 573, 670 (1989)) (emphasis added). Religious accommodations “fit[] within the tradition long followed” in our nation’s history.¹⁶ Id. at 577. Indeed, the historical understanding of “establishments” in some cases requires broad exemptions for religious employers. In Hosanna-Tabor, a unanimous Supreme Court held that historical anti-establishment interests required that churches be exempt from employment discrimination laws with regard to their ministerial employees. 565 U.S. 171. That exemption is required because “the Establishment Clause . . . prohibits government involvement in such ecclesiastical decisions.” Id. at 189. Like the ministerial exception, the Final Rule belongs to a tradition of avoiding government interference with religious decision-making and the internal determinations of religious groups like the Little Sisters.

Even under the much-maligned Lemon test, the Supreme Court has long recognized that accommodation of religion is a permissible secular purpose, which does not advance or endorse religion, and which avoids, rather than creates, entanglement with religion.¹⁷ The leading case is Corporation of Presiding Bishop v. Amos. There, a federal employment law prohibited discrimination on the basis of religion. But it also included a religious exemption, which permitted religious

¹⁷ The Lemon test is one of the most criticized tests in constitutional law. See, e.g., Utah Highway Patrol Ass’n v. Am. Atheists, Inc., 565 U.S. 994 (2011) (Thomas, J., dissenting from denial of certiorari) (collecting criticism by Chief Justice Roberts and Justices Kennedy, Alito, Thomas, and Scalia); Green v. Haskell Cty. Bd. of Comm’rs, 574 F.3d 1235, 1245 (10th Cir. 2009) (Gorsuch, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc) (noting that Lemon “leave[s] the state of the law ‘in Establishment Clause purgatory.’”) (citation omitted).

1 organizations to hire and fire on the basis of religion. 483 U.S. 327, 329 n.1 (1987). That exemption
2 was challenged as a violation of the Establishment Clause, allegedly because it advanced religion by
3 “singl[ing] out religious entities for a benefit.” Id. at 338. But the Supreme Court unanimously upheld
4 the religious exemption, concluding that the “government acts with [a] proper purpose” when it “lift[s]
5 a regulation that burdens the exercise of religion.” Id.

6 The States insist this case is more serious than Amos, even though Amos involved a far more serious
7 burden on third parties: the loss of a job, not merely the inability to obtain one particular insurance
8 benefit through one’s employer. The States rely instead on the earlier case of Thornton v. Caldor, 472
9 U.S. 703 (1985). But the Supreme Court in Amos explained that the employment accommodations
10 upheld there were distinct from the law in Thornton: “Undoubtedly, Mayson’s freedom of choice in 11 religious matters was impinged upon, but it was the Church . . . and not the Government, who put him
12 to the choice of changing his religious practices or losing his job.” Amos, 483 U.S. at 337 n. 15. Here,
13 no one is being put to the choice of changing their practices or losing their job; women who do not 14 obtain contraceptives through their employer can obtain them from a variety of different sources. Any 15 burden on third parties is far less than that in Thornton. As the States’ own evidence makes exceedingly 16 clear, employees have a variety of different means to obtain contraceptives, and the employer
17 exemption here does not coerce an employee any more than a grandfathering exemption or small 18 business exemption. It would upend the Religion Clauses to hold that it is perfectly acceptable for the 19 government to exempt millions of employers through grandfathering, exempt small businesses from 20 providing any insurance coverage at all, or exempt its own government-run plans from the preventive
21 services mandate, but it suddenly creates an Establishment Clause violation if the government exempts
22 the Little Sisters of the Poor too.

1 The States’ reliance upon the three-Justice plurality in Texas Monthly, Inc. v. Bullock, 489 U.S. 1
2 (1989), fares no better. First, the narrowest ground of decision among the split opinions in that case
3 was that “content” discrimination in regulations governing press “is plainly forbidden by the Press
4 Clause,” so Texas Monthly arguably does not apply beyond the press context. 489 U.S. at 25-26
5 (White, J., concurring in the judgment). But even the three-Justice plurality—which emphasized that 6 the exemption at issue “targeted [] writings that promulgate the teachings of religious faith”—found
7 that exemptions were appropriate to “remov[e] a significant state-imposed deterrent to the free
8 exercise of religion.” 489 U.S. at 15. The plurality also noted that the tax exemption would have 9 survived if “the benefits derived by religious organizations flowed to a large number of nonreligious
10 groups as well,” or if “similar tax breaks” were available for others. 489 U.S. at 11, 14 n.4. Here, the 11 Final Rule lifts a significant state-imposed burden on religious exercise, as dozens of courts have held.
12 And the exemption is not unique: nonreligious employers have access to a variety of exemptions much
13 larger than the exemption challenged here, including grandfathering, the small business exemption, 14 and the moral objector exemption. Given the burdens on religious exercise and the variety of 15 exemptions available—some of which pose far greater hurdles to employees than the Final Rule—the 16 Texas Monthly plurality actually supports the agencies.

17 The agencies are not “advanc[ing] religion through [their] own activities and influence.” Amos,
18 483 U.S. at 337. They are merely lifting a severe governmental burden on private religious exercise,
19 a burden that 50 federal courts have seen fit to lift for religious plaintiffs. Such religious 20 accommodations are not just permissible under the Establishment Clause, they “follow[] the best of 21 our traditions.” Zorach v. Clauson, 343 U.S. 306, 314 (1952).

D. The Final Rule does not violate the Equal Protection Clause.

The States' equal protection argument also fails. The IFRs make no sex classification. It is the underlying mandate, which the States wish to enforce, that creates differential rights based on sex. The Little Sisters and other religious groups cannot participate in (for example) the sterilization of either men or women. But they only need a religious exemption from the latter because that is all the States are seeking to force them to provide.

The Final Rule focuses on one portion of the women's preventive services mandate because that is the portion that was enjoined repeatedly in court. If the agencies were creating a sex-based classification when they created the Final Rule, then the courts were doing so as well when they created judicial exemptions from one portion of the preventive services mandate. The same would be true of the Supreme Court's ruling in Hobby Lobby. The States cite no case for the novel proposition that an exception to a rule with a sex-based classification is itself a sex-based classification—particularly where the exemption is not handed out on the basis of sex. Nor have they offered any case for the even more preposterous notion that the proper judicial remedy in such a case would be to enforce the original sex-based classification, invalidating only the exemption thereto.

In any case, even if the religious objector rules were subject to heightened scrutiny, they would easily pass. As discussed above, a change to the rules serves a significant government interest in protecting religious exercise. The Ninth Circuit has held that "it is always in the public interest to prevent the violation of a party's constitutional rights," and that deprivation of constitutional rights constitutes irreparable harm. See, e.g., Melendres v. Arpaio, 695 F.3d 990, 1002 (9th Cir. 2012). Protecting the First Amendment and similar statutory rights of religious groups like the Little Sisters is unquestionably a significant government interest. The rules are also substantially related to that interest; they are based upon the known religious objectors and information gathered during the

1 rulemaking process regarding the types of employers who might seek an exemption. See 83 Fed. Reg.
 2 at 57,576-78. The Final Rule does not exempt “all employers,” but only the subset with sincere
 3 religious objections. Mot. 56. The States object that the exemption is no longer limited to churches,
 4 but as explained at length in the Rule, the exemption for churches was too narrow and posed
 5 constitutional and statutory problems. 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,544. The Final Rule is substantially related 6 to a significant government interest.

7 III. The States cannot prevail on their claims that the Final Rule is procedurally invalid.

8 A. Any procedural deficiency was cured by notice and comment before the Final Rule was 9 issued.

10 It cannot be reasonably disputed that the States had notice and an opportunity to be heard on all
 11 relevant aspects of the Final Rule prior to promulgation of the Final Rule. 5 U.S.C. § 553; see Paulsen
 12 v. Daniels, 413 F.3d 999, 1007 (9th Cir. 2005) (“interested parties” must be given notice that 13 “enable[s] them to participate in the rulemaking process before the relevant agency adopt[s] the rule”).
 14 The Eastern District of Pennsylvania acknowledged these requirements were met. See Pennsylvania
 15 v. Trump, 351 F. Supp. 3d 791, 812 (E.D. Pa. 2019) (“[T]he States are unlikely to succeed on the 16 merits of their argument that, in promulgating the Final Rules, the Agencies’ actions failed to meet the 17 requirements of notice-and-comment rulemaking.”). Yet the States advance the novel theory that an 18 otherwise compliant notice and comment period is an irrelevant nullity whenever it follows an 19 allegedly procedurally defective interim rule. Such a rule would run counter to both Ninth Circuit 20 precedent and common sense, and would call into question both common APA practice and the 21 Mandate more broadly.

22 In Paulsen, for example, the Ninth Circuit invalidated an interim rule it found to have not complied
 23 with notice-and-comment procedures, but held the final rule “which adopted the [IFR] without change”
 24 was the effective rule, not the rule previously in force which was itself legally infirm. 413 F.3d at 1008.

1 This case is instructive in two ways: (1) it does not say in any way that a procedural error in an IFR
 2 taints the procedure for issuing a subsequent final rule; and (2) it specifically placed a new final rule
 3 in force where—as here—the rule previously in force was illegal. See supra Part II.A.3 (regulations
 4 forming contraceptive mandate violated RFRA absent exception). Likewise, in Buschmann v.
 5 Schweiker, the Ninth Circuit held invalid an interim final rule that failed to comply with notice and 6 comment procedures, but declined to strike the final rule “identical to the interim regulation challenged”
 7 which all parties agreed was “valid.” 676 F.2d 352, 358 (9th Cir. 1982). The government was denied 8 the benefit of its improperly promulgated rule, with no impact on the properly issued rule.

9 This comports with common sense. According to the GAO, 35% of all major rules were finalized
 10 without a prior notice of proposed rulemaking, with agencies commonly requesting post-promulgation
 11 comments. See U.S. Gov’t Accountability Office, GAO-13-21, Federal Rulemaking: Agencies Could
 12 Take Additional Steps to Respond to Public Comments, 3 n.6, 8, 24 (Dec. 2012),
 13 <http://www.gao.gov/assets/660/651052.pdf>. Adopting the States’ rule would render common post-
 14 promulgation notice-and-comment procedures as simple time wasting; if a court found good cause 15 lacking for the interim rule to be promulgated after notice and comment, a later final rule with 16 responses to the post-promulgation comments would be invalidated no matter how comprehensive.
 17 Further, even if a Final Rule could be struck simply because its notice-and-comment process was 18 preceded by an IFR rather than a notice of proposed rulemaking, it would be particularly odd to follow
 19 that rule when the IFR was (and remains) enjoined for nearly a full year prior to the Final Rule’s 20 promulgation. Pennsylvania, 351 F. Supp. 3d at 830 (IFR was enjoined in December 2017 “without 21 any specific geographic or temporal limitation”).

22 It is not clear that the States mean what they say in offering this Court a per se rule that past
 23 procedural error taints subsequent notice and comment. After all, the States’ relief in this case—if any

1 could be had—would have to come from specifically bringing the regulations underlying the Mandate
2 back into force as to religious objectors. And those relevant regulations—imposing a mandate, creating
3 a religious exemption, and modifying that exemption—were themselves all initially imposed by IFR
4 without notice and comment. Even if this Court determines it can fashion an equitable remedy without 5 considering the validity of the prior regulations, the States’ inability to obtain relief without embracing
6 regulations not in compliance with their legal theory just underscores how sweeping their per se rule 7 is.

8 While the Eastern District of Pennsylvania came to a different conclusion, it relied on Third Circuit
9 precedent that not only arguably conflicts with Paulsen, but also struck final rules under unique
10 circumstances not applicable here. Most relevantly, the court there relied on Natural Resources
11 Defense Council, Inc. (NRDC) v. EPA, 683 F.2d 752 (3d Cir. 1982), where the Third Circuit—in a
12 challenge to an interim rule—also struck the final rule as part of the remedy. See Pennsylvania, 351
13 F. Supp. 3d at 813 (reasoning from NRDC as “most directly on point”). But there, the final rule was 14 contingent on the interim rule’s existence, as the question it asked—whether to “further suspend” an 15 effective date—was contingent on the validity of the IFR. 683 F.2d at 757 (citation omitted); see id.
16 at 768 (“Commendably, EPA did conduct a rulemaking on the question of whether its already 17 accomplished postponement should be continued; however, that rulemaking cannot replace one on the 18 question of whether the amendments should be postponed in the first place.”). And in any event, NRDC
19 dealt with the effective repeal of a regulation passed by comprehensive notice-and-comment—not a 20 regulation itself built on IFRs. Id. at 754. To the extent Ninth Circuit precedent allows for 21 consideration of NRDC, it is inapposite.

B. In any event, any procedural error was harmless.

The Final Rule’s detailed level of engagement and response with comments also demonstrates the States’ inability to show harm from any procedural error in the Final Rule’s notice-and-comment process where the only plausible “error” is the prior issuance of an interim final rule. “[T]he burden of showing that an [agency] error is harmful normally falls upon the party attacking” the agency action. Shinseki v. Sanders, 556 U.S. 396, 409 (2009). The alleged procedural error is harmless if “the outcome of the administrative proceedings will be the same absent [the agency]’s error.” Green Island Power Auth. v. FERC, 577 F.3d 148, 165 (2d Cir. 2009); see also PDK Labs. Inc. v. U.S. Drug Enf’t Admin., 362 F.3d 786, 799 (D.C. Cir. 2004) (“If the agency’s mistake did not affect the outcome, if it did not prejudice the petitioner, it would be senseless to vacate and remand for reconsideration.”).

While “harmless error analysis in administrative rulemaking” includes “the process as well as the result,” this means simply that “the purposes” of notice must be “fully satisfied” and that “a full and fair opportunity to be heard” took place. Riverbend Farms, Inc. v. Madigan, 958 F.2d 1479, 1487 (9th Cir. 1992) (citations omitted). Here, as explained above, the agencies filed detailed responses to public comments, revisiting and revising the prior IFR in substance, style, and analysis. The States have not persuasively explained why, under the circumstances, the opportunity to be heard with regard to the Final Rule would have been qualitatively different had the IFR come in the form of a detailed Notice of Proposed Rulemaking that was substantively unaltered after comments. That is particularly true where, as here, the agencies have publicly stated their understanding that continuation of the prior rules violates a federal civil rights law.

The Little Sisters also preserve their argument, pending further review, that “immediately remedying the RFRA violation constituted good cause” for the prior IFR. See California, 911 F.3d at 577 (finding change of position “nine months” following prior administration’s contrary statements

1 was insufficiently explained). The Little Sisters continue to believe both that the IFR promulgating a 2 religious exception was sufficiently explained, and that regardless, any procedural violation was 3 harmless given the actual existence of a RFRA violation. See United States v. Reynolds, 710 F.3d 498,
 4 517-18 (3d Cir. 2013) (while “harmless error analysis” considers “the process as well as the result,”
 5 even “the complete failure to provide for notice and comments is harmless” when “the conclusion
 6 reached in the administrative rule was the only possible conclusion” (citations omitted)).

7 CONCLUSION

8 This Court should dismiss the States’ complaint. In the alternative, it should grant summary
 9 judgment in favor of the Defendants and deny the States’ summary judgment motion.
